What This Book Can Do for You

Do you have everything you want? Are you happy? Are you content? How about your love-life? Can it be improved? Can you use more money, more often? How is your health? Do you want to feel stronger, more energetic, more powerful? How is life treating you? Would you like to change your circumstances? Would you like to effect the future so that when it arrives you will be happier? What about the present? Are you plagued by setbacks, obstacles, and petty annoyances? Do people stand between you and success? How about enemies and negative people? Would you like to hold power over them?

If your reply is "Yes" to any of these questions, then you are in the right place at the right time, for this book offers you the opportunity to take command of any situation, any condition, any circumstance. Now you can benefit substantially through the use of spells, prayers, curses, and chants. This book will show you how.

People everywhere in the world have accomplished and are accomplishing their goals, realizing their dreams, and fulfilling their desires with the aid of the mighty power which lies behind incantations and charms. You can do the same!

Whatever you want and want badly enough, you can have. Perhaps you want a better job or a more wholesome love-life or maybe just a better deal from "Fate." Well, you can get immediate and satisfying results by using the key to success which this book reveals to you.

Before you even reach the final chapter of this book you will be utilizing the secret power behind all spells, prayers, curses, and chants. You now hold in your hands the key to material, physical, spiritual, and psychic wealth. The secret is revealed TO YOU so that you can get what you want out of life right now. The secrets disclosed in these power-packed pages will make your hopes, dreams, wishes, and desires come true—easily, quickly, miraculously!

Sound too good to be true? Maybe you're expecting some long and arduous exercises, or complicated rituals. No. In the following chapters you will find practical, easy-to-understand, easy-to-use techniques for producing whatever you want in your life. YOU BECOME CREATOR! Neither your time nor your energies are required. The methods I have outlined for you are based upon ancient practices, well-guarded practices, and are designed to bring you whatever you want. And here is the biggest benefit: spells, prayers, curses, and chants work instantly. You don't have to sweat, worry, grunt, or groan. You will apply the secrets presented and let things happen for you! Every word you read will carry you forward to the realization of a full, rich, and rewarding life—wherever you are, whoever you are, whatever you are.

When you have read so much as the first chapter you will see why this book, and only this one, will give you the power to change your luck, reshape your future, attract the opposite sex, make money gravitate to you. I have compiled these secrets and methods for your benefit after years of research, study, and practice; secrets and methods which will enable you to change, improve, and brighten the very course of your destiny.

My goal is to provide you with an easy way of getting what you want out of life. I have taken all the secrecy out of Oriental meditation, all the hocus-pocus out of Black Magic rituals, all the mumbo-jumbo out of witchcraft's spells. The end result of my labors is this book—a simple, practical way for you to reach any goal, attain any height, enjoy any pleasure. The revelatory knowledge in this book is for you. You can master it and thereby master the secret of all spells, prayers, curses, and chants. And here is what such mastery will do for you: you will learn how to deal effectively with the recurrent and seemingly endless problems of everyday living in our troubled world.

Your new abilities will dwarf any and all challenges. Difficulties in your life will vanish. Stress and strain will evaporate. Money will flow to you. You will be attractive, magnetic, personable, esteemed. The key to all of this, and more, is presented to you right here in the pages of this book—the key to putting spells, prayers, curses, and chants to work for you right now in your own life.

The Fantastic Features in Store for You

Have you ever been afraid, or dreaded something? You will learn how to cast the spell that dispels fear and turns lions of dread into harmless kittens—without lifting a finger!

Are other people luckier than you? You will learn how to incant the chant that changes bad luck into good luck—with ease!

Have you ever been bullied, lied to, gossiped about, or in any way maligned? You will learn how to pray the prayer that makes the worst enemies do friendly deeds on your behalf, even against their will!—and you don't have to move a muscle!

Is your paycheck inadequate to meet the demands of rising costs? You will learn how to utter the curse that breaks the bonds of poverty—and all you have to do is sit and relax as the money comes to you!

Spells, Prayers, Curses and Chants Are Your Answer

Witches, warlocks, magicians, shamans, and saints throughout history have always raised themselves above the common lot of frustrated, hopeless individuals. How? Not by working harder or longer hours. Not by wishing and musing. They tapped the secret power which lies behind all spells, prayers, curses, and chants. While others moaned and fretted all around them, those few masters enjoyed a fuller, richer life. You can do the same. You will smile as others cry. You will feel light and airy while others continue to be burdened. The pressures and obstacles of the mundane world will have no effect on you. Your luck will be incredible.

Happiness, harmony, luck, success—all these things which the ancients knew how to get are at your fingertips. The simple secret lies within these pages for you. All you have to do is read, absorb, and activate powers which will work for you!

You will find every chapter loaded with startling but practical and easy methods for attracting riches, love, power, energy, and the life-fulfilling properties which must respond for your good when you use spells, prayers, curses and chants.

Some of the Benefits This Book Will Bring You

This book is chock full of cases where people just like yourself have put its secrets to work in their lives—easily. The following is just a sample of what is in store for you:

1. A young businessman, over his head in debt and fearing bankruptcy, employed the power of curses and immediately saw increased wealth. (See Page 23.)
2. A man who did not believe in chanting, tried it anyway, and realized spectacular improvements in his physical and mental conditions. (See Page 57.)
3. A Sunday School teacher turned a spiritual gift into material wealth by using Power Prayers. (See Page 91.)
4. An airline stewardess, who chants daily, foresaw her plane bombed, and was able to prevent the disaster. (See Page 22.)
5. An underpaid factory worker took $50 to Las Vegas, cast the "Luck Spell" over the Blackjack table, and returned home with $2,000. (See Page 281.)
6. A man dependent on sleeping pills started chanting the "Insomnia Chant" and kicked a drug habit that was killing him. (See Page 167.)
7. A woman experienced a miracle in her life after praying the prayer that "Worries Worry." (See Page 140.)
8. A high school girl cut through psychic obstruction by effortlessly employing the "Blade Curse." (See Page 32.)

9. A teenaged girl used the "Prayer of Omniscience" and "saw" where to find an old stamp collection worth thousands of dollars. (See Page 50.)

10. A gambling man from Idaho prayed power prayers and claimed that it is a bad day for him if he comes away from Las Vegas with less than $13,000. (See Page 133.)

Your New Power Is Already Increasing

Even as you read these words, very ancient principles of cosmic action are at work, activated by your mind—the source of all energy, the root of all spells, prayers, curses, and chants. That power is ready to respond to your will. No matter what you want, need, or desire; no matter who you are, where you are, or how you are, you can put the power to work for your own good right now. Following years of occult research into the source of the power of mystics, witches, magicians, and occultists in general, I discovered the key to their abilities. I want you to have that key and so I present it here in this book for your use.

While others go on wishing, you will command. While others go on working and slaving for crumbs, you will relax and acquire everything you want. While others continue to worry and pine away, you will happily move from unpleasant conditions to heights of joy, happiness, and contentment. While others strive and labor for what they get, you will be served as a king is served by his subjects. The key to this miraculous position is in your hands.

You no longer have to suffer lack and privation. You don't have to go through life loveless, broke, pinching pennies, yielding to the will of others, getting thrashed by life's whims. You will use the secrets within these pages to activate latent powers and energies and make them subservient to your desires.

You are about to discover the one secret that makes prayer work . . . a secret so unusual . . . so different . . . that it can work a miracle in your life. For this secret, as I have said earlier, unifies all psychic and spiritual power into one Master Rule, and actually taps the hidden forces that lie behind prayers, spells, chants . . . and even curses. And it makes them work.

You'll see, for example, how a Money Spell based on the Master Rule can put a big roll of bills into your pocket with blinding speed . . . how a Health Chant can make your aches and pains vanish in a flash . . . how a Power Curse can smash your enemies . . . and much, much more!

You'll discover that the power of kings and wizards is now in your hands—ready to be used any way you want. It can bring you anything you desire . . . quickly, easily, automatically.

Do you want to make more money? Hold great power over others and make them do your will? Attract friends and lovers like honey attracts flies? Ward off the evil eye? Just say the exact words you'll find in this book—and get your desire. Let these power-packed incantations bring it to you!

Nothing is left to chance. You get everything you need from start to finish—the exact words for every spell, chant, prayer or curse that you want—and you find out exactly how, when, and where to use them for the quickest and best results.

Here, too, you'll find what are sometimes called the Five Veiled Secrets of Spell Casting—five simple, seemingly ordinary actions that multiply the power of every spell, chant, curse or prayer many times over. Men and women in all walks of life have been helped by this miraculous power, and by all the rest of the techniques, methods, and other things revealed in these pages. It's worked for them . . . it MUST work for you!

I HAVE DONE IT. MY FRIENDS HAVE DONE IT. MY CLIENTS HAVE DONE IT. WE ARE NOW DOING IT. SO CAN YOU!

All it takes is your eyes to read the words in this book. Then your subconscious will take over—that part of your mind which is as ancient as the secrets within these pages, that part of your mind which will respond to your every command, your every wish, your every request, once you learn how to master those secrets.

So read on and absorb the keys to life more abundant and you will realize your every hope, attain what you want, and experience a fuller, richer life.

Success and happiness to you.

How Spells, Prayers, Curses and Chants
Can Bring You
A Fuller, Richer Life

Modern scientific research is fast rediscovering ancient magical truths. It was once a source of wonder that magicians could create miracles through chanting, that witches could cast spells, that men could curse animate and inanimate objects, and that some people could pray prayers that worked. Now we find modern instances of the same ancient principles in new terms: meditation, praying over plants, Oriental chanting, modern witches' covens and Satanist cults, ESP experiments, psychic phenomena, and so on. And it all points to one startling revelation: the human being somehow contains within himself a source of energy whose name changes often but whose power never diminishes.

Your Innate But Latent Power

For most people, the idea of spells, prayers, curses and chants is all mixed up with complicated rituals, exercises and ceremonies. The latter, however, as science continues to demonstrate, are not really necessary. In the past such rituals were performed for various reasons: to confuse the outsider; to frighten the uninitiated; to conceal supernatural truth; to delude the blasphemer. Today we know that the secret to many so-called magical acts lies not in ceremony and costume, but in the untapped recesses of the human mind.

Activating Your Latent Power

You can activate your own hidden source of "magical" power in the same way that occultists and mystics have been doing for ages: by using spells, prayers, curses and chants. And, just as they have done, you can realize your hidden potential, transform your very life, obtain health and riches and fame. Wherever I go these days, whether to Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Houston, and even to small country towns, men and women tell me of the ways they are using various spells, prayers, curses and chants to produce desired results. One young man in Boston exclaimed, "I don't know how it works! I chant my mantra and obstacles vanish!"

How a Man Chanted His Way into Job Promotion

About six months ago I was in Denver, lecturing on "The Power of Chants," and a man came to see me afterwards. He was depressed because his salary was not enough to meet his needs. I inquired into the situation at his place of work, and that brought us right to the crux of the matter. "It's a deadlock," he said. "If I could get ahead, everything would be different, but there's too much competition for the better jobs. I'm not as educated as my competitors."

I said, "Your problem isn't lack of education; it's lack of self-awareness. You have access to a power that all the schooling in the world can't give you."

"Agreed," he said. "I believe it. But how do I get it to work? You don't know what I'm up against."

I informed the man that it doesn't matter in the least what his problem or the obstacle to his progress are. Then I pointed out that he should stop inflating his competitors, because all humans are basically the same in so far as root power is concerned. What makes an individual unique is the manner in which he uses the power at his disposal.

"By feeling dwarfed by others, you are making gods of them. As you continue to view them as larger, you become smaller. As you consider them more important, you correspondingly consider yourself insignificant. By seeing them as unique, you fail to see yourself as the unique and special person you are in your own right. In short, they have nothing to do with you. In spite of what it seems, they cannot help or hinder you. Your success or failure lies within yourself. You are potentially successful, dynamic, and happy. What you must do is rid yourself of the thoughts that block your potential and keep you from realizing it. Now, let's get down to business and see if you can't do something about your situation."

I gave him the following chant:

A soft breeze washes through my mind and brushes away all thoughts, airing my mind for greater ideas.

He was amazed at its simplicity. I told him to chant it, right then, and he did. Following my instructions, he chanted it orally and mentally, then and later, daily and nightly. The key is "perseverance." The more you have blocking your potential, the more perseverance is called for.

A few weeks later I received a letter from the man which said, in part, "Not only did the chant clear my mind of extraneous thoughts, but a fantastic idea came to me about improving a machine's output at work. I told the foreman about it and I got so involved with putting my idea to work that I forgot all about my 'problem.' Imagine my shock when I was made the foreman's assistant!"

The Bible said it long ago: "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?"

The Chanting Stewardess Who Foretold the Future

Diane S., a young stewardess for a national airline, naturally comes to mind when I speak of the magic power of chants. She had attended one of my lectures in Florida, and began practicing chanting for no other reason than to increase her own self-confidence and self-awareness. About a year ago, however, she had a remarkable experience. She was at home alone, chanting and meditating and, while in the Alpha state, she had a vision. She saw herself in stewardess uniform, boarding Flight 243. A man jostled her, brushed by her, and hurried into the plane. In the vision Diane found that her eyes could see right through the man's briefcase. It was a bomb! Her heart leapt and the vision ended.

Diane didn't know what to make of it. She was reluctant to mention it to anyone. For she dreaded censure. Some of the other stewardesses already thought she was "a little kookie" for her personal beliefs. She might have dropped the whole subject and relegated it to her subconscious. But when she arrived at the airport she saw the man who had been in her vision—same suit, same looks, same briefcase! Spurred to action, Diane reported her conviction to the authorities. Since the airline already had authority to search luggage, the guard humored Diane by detaining the man and having his briefcase opened. At the sight of the bomb—it was there!—Diane felt a "rush of spirit" wash through her. She had emptied herself of extraneous thoughts so that Something higher could express Itself. Diane had saved a total of 63 lives!

Her chant during meditation is this:

I am a spark of the Great Light.
The Mind envelops me.
I am one with All.
My brain is a channel.
The Great Light shines through me.

The above chant prepared Diane's mind for the reception of what is today called an Extrasensory Perception. She perceived a death plot which was visible in the Great Mind by being "open" to it. Diane's vision is but one of the infinity of possible fringe benefits of chanting. She only wanted to clear her mind for relaxation purposes, but she also made herself available to higher inspiration. An additional and quite unexpected development was this: One of the passengers was so grateful for having had his life saved that, in spite of Diane's modest refusal, he sent her a personal check in the amount of $5000. Diane is no longer a stewardess, but she continues to chant.

What you need to realize is this: Whether you know or do not know how or why spells, prayers, curses and chants work, people like yourself, in all walks of life, are using them to their own benefit and often with surprising results. So can you!

He Learned How to Curse a Curse

A businessman came to me in desperation. His business was failing, he told me, sales had dropped considerably, he was fast approaching bankruptcy, his nerves were shot. "I don't know what it is," he lamented. "Competition? Changing times? The economic situation? All I know is, I'm getting lost in life's shuffle."

I said, "You're looking in the wrong direction. There is always competition; times are always changing; and we'll always have economic situations. What you need is something with which to reverse the trend of psychic flow behind all those physical manifestations."

He started by practicing the following curse:

Let everyone succeed, but let not their success cast a shadow upon my efforts. I curse the flow which would wash me to ruin.

I instructed him to practice this curse, orally and mentally, for a few days, and then to use it at the office as he undertook to transact new business. He did this on a Thursday, employing the curse mentally even as he conducted business with a prospective buyer. That very evening he called me, highly excited, and blurted into the phone that the buyer had signed the contract right then and there—to the tune of $63,000!

The very next day—Friday—he called again. He was elated. A contract he thought he had lost came through. The amount? $75,000. On Saturday, no less (he informed me of this development on the following Monday), a former client called at his home, apologized for having rejected his company's earlier bid, complained of poor service on the part of the people he was now dealing with, and begged for a contract!

I could go on and on about this man, for I hear from him often. The curse continues to work! But I'll suffice it to say that he is a highly successful and respected businessman today, whose product and service are unimpeachable, and whose company has flourished beyond his wildest dreams. This is actually easy to understand, because his own potential success was being blocked and curses used properly bring fantastic results.

The Secret of Spells, Prayers, Curses and Chants

The greatest secret possessed by ancient mystics and occultists, which has been handed down from generation to generation by oral tradition, is this: Spells, prayers, curses and chants work effectively to the degree that they are charged with emotion. Incantations do not work by virtue of "magical formula" or by virtue of sentence structure (the uninitiated always search for "power" names and words). Spells, prayers, curses and chants work because you want them to work, and this no matter the words used. The secret lies not in the words, but in the emotional charge behind the words. Certainly there are formulized witches' spells and Oriental chants. But the fact remains that without the emotional charge behind them, they would be but vain utterings, fruitless and empty words.

An illustrative example of this truth—and one which I point out repeatedly—is that of Jesus when he cursed the fig tree. Matthew 21:19 says:

And when he saw a fig tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away.

Jesus said exactly nine words. Let's take a closer look at them:

Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever.

Nothing magical in them, is there? And yet, the fig tree withered away. Why? Because they were imbued with faith, belief, strength, conviction, feeling! It is the power of emotion behind words that make them potent. Thus Jesus could end the parable of the fig tree by saying, "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." (Matthew 21:22).

You hold the secret within you, the secret that makes words potent symbols, powerful swords, laser beams of effectiveness. Formulized spells, prayers, curses and chants are all well and good—as long as they are charged with power. Likewise, you can make up your own simply by analyzing the situation, ascertaining what is needed to correct a given circumstance, weighing and balancing all facets of a problem.

The Prayer of the Dominican Sisters

Everyone is profoundly aware of the Watergate situation. Some people wish to do something effective about it, like the Dominican Sisters of Adrian, Michigan. Time magazine reported that these nuns constructed a potent prayer for a "government of integrity." The Sisters pray:

Strengthen and inspire our representatives to pass legislation that will emancipate us from cancerous greed and conspiratorial secrecy.

Imbued with emotional charge, with faith and hope and expectation, I do not doubt for one moment that the prayer of the Sisters will have greater effect on the political situation than a hundred new laws.

Concrete Walls and Iron Bars Do Not a Prison Make

I met a despondent young man during one of my visits to a prison where I sometimes give lectures. He told me that he has been praying for years for a better life, and that this was his third time in a prison. I asked him what he prayed, and he shrugged his shoulders, and said, "Oh, you know. Just the regular prayers."

His obvious diffidence said a lot. Here was an example of the person who utters words but who refuses to invest those words with life and spirit. I invited him to attend that evening's lecture, but he declined on the grounds that he wanted to watch TV. It did not surprise me when I learned a few months later that this young man had led three others in an attempted prison break. It failed, and he received an additional two years to his original sentence. Sad, isn't it? Life is the best teacher, and the lesson in this case could very well be: It isn't what you pray, but how you pray. His prison is of his own making in this respect.

The Convict Who Helped Himself

I cannot leave the reader on such a sad note, so I will share the news of how another prisoner achieved success through the use of a spell. Ben R., like the aforementioned inmate, has a history of criminal activities. But he sincerely wanted to do something about his life, which, as he put it, was one misery after another. Ben's basic problem, in his own words, was a certain indefatigable urge to steal whatever he wanted. He began his spotted career as a boy, stealing candy, toys, then bicycles which he sold. He went on to burglarizing clothes, money, and automobiles. When I met Ben he was in prison for car theft. He was desperate.

"I've never listened to anyone," he told me. "Not my father, not priest, not teacher. No one! Now I'm ready to listen. I don't want to spend the rest of my life in prison. If you can help me, please do it."

It was not a plea to be ignored. Because of the extreme circumstances of the case, I counseled Ben at length. I pointed out that the power released by the use of spells, prayers, curses and chants could be channeled through any human being. To prepare him for the proper use of incantations, I first gave him this chant to practice:

My mind is clearing of habit-forming patterns.
Mind is calm.
Mind is harmony.
Mind is mine.

When he had diligently practiced this chant for some weeks and I could see that his thinking was clearing of negative patterns, I gave him a curse to use against his own urge to commit crime, pointing out that it was not really his own urge, but an urge born of the accumulation of less than desirable environmental influences, both in his childhood and here in prison. He had much to curse!

In the course of his cursing and chanting, his mind grew clearer, and his heart grew lighter. He described it to me as a spiritual experience. Here is the curse he uses:

I curse the lie that I am a born criminal. I curse the negative thoughts that urge me to go against my conscience. I curse the dark power that would lead me to my own destruction.

Several months passed, and Ben appeared before the Parole Board. He got his parole, was released, got a job, met a lovely girl, and is planning to marry her. Here we see a rapid succession of wonderful benefits. Ben wrote me recently, and said, "I'll never part with the curse you gave me. I don't understand this feeling I have for it, but it's almost like it's a part of my life now. I utter it every morning and every night."

As much as Ben feels that it is "his curse," the fact of the matter is that it is everyone's. You can use the same curse, if you wish, simply by replacing certain words—unless you are indeed in a prison.

For instance, replacing the word "criminal" with a word like "failure" makes the curse available to you as a potent tool for your own progress.

Chants and curses, used positively, understood or not, work miracles. You can have miracles happen in your life the same way. Every human being who is not afraid to exercise his own God-given powers can use spells, prayers, curses and chants. We do so effectively by meaning what we say, as in Ben's case. The magic lies in the intentions of the heart.

Anyone Can Use Spells, Prayers, Curses and Chants

Modern scientific research tends to demonstrate that all people can be channels for so-called mystic power. The force of energy available to the firewalker, the shaman, the magician, and the sorcerer is also available to the cabdriver, the secretary, the bank president, and the beauty queen. No human being is denied. Moreover, the source of personal power may be used to solve any problem, spiritual or physical, psychic or material. In short, spells, prayers, curses and chants can help you, no matter your need or desire.

You may be a hard-working individual—and yet, for all your labor, time and energy output, you get little in return. Here's where a curse can help you—not a curse against a fellow human being—but a curse against obstacles, impediments, and setbacks.

How a Factory Worker Got Rich

John L. couldn't get ahead in his job. Luck was against him, he said. So I gave him the "Luck Spell," which goes like this:

Lady Luck, I've been a fool. I never acknowledged your beauty. Smile now, lovely lady, and brighten my life.
Dance pretty girl. Sing and laugh and toss your hair. My eyes are on you!

John thought this was funny, but when I pointed out that luck has in all times been known as a lady—and a spurned one, at that—he decided to give it a try. And it worked! His "luck" changed overnight. He won a raffle, then had the "good luck" to run into an old friend who owed him some money. Many things of this nature began to happen in John's daily life. Lady Luck was dancing well for him. It doesn't hurt to visualize Lady Luck as a beautiful woman dancing; this may even increase the emotional charge necessary to make words come to life.

I had to continue my lecture tour, so it was some time before I saw John again. When I did, he was a happy man. I inquired if Lady Luck had influenced his job at all.

"Job!" John exclaimed. "I'm in business for myself now!"

He then told me how he had taken $50 to Las Vegas, sat at one Blackjack table for eight hours straight, and mentally reiterated the "Luck Spell" countless times, and that he had parlayed the $50 into $2000! That wasn't exactly what I had in mind when I gave him the spell, but the important thing is that John is now a happy man. Remember: spells work when charged with emotion. John's emotional charge was obviously more than adequate! An interesting aside in John's case is related to what I said above about the femininity of Lady Luck. John told me, "It was uncanny. All I had to do was sit at the table and mentally cast the spell and the cards kept coming my way. But this is the strange thing: I somehow got the feeling that the spell was working through the card dealer, the young girl behind the table! The pit boss changed card decks and dealers at least ten times, and yet, there was no way to change my luck!"

Old World Power in New World Life

You can use spells, prayers, curses and chants to your own benefit right now and every day. The power which responds to them is an ageless power, the same yesterday, today, and tomorrow. Only man's mind has changed, filled as it is with all kinds of superimposed attitudes, prejudices and preconceived notions. You can cast a spell on adversity, curse bad luck, pray for anything from spiritual light to material wealth, or chant your way to peace and harmony. For spells, prayers, curses and chants are no longer merely products of magic and religion, but act on definite scientific principles—universal laws. The only thing standing in the way of what you want is—yourself.

chapter 2

How to Use Power Curses to Block Psychic Bombardment

In medieval times a witch would use a curse to block another witch from inflicting psychic damage. Well, witches have gone by the board, for the most part. But what about psychic damage?

Psychic bombardment can occur two ways today: one, it can be directed at you by another person, just as in medieval days and, two, it can reach you quite innocently. The latter point raises the vital issue. People are not usually deliberately evil, but all of us at one time or another have negative thoughts and feelings. Once accumulated in the psychic atmosphere, like clouds of smog over the city, we can quite unwittingly walk right into them! This is why Oriental gurus visiting this country always exorcise a house before entering it. By the use of potent spells, prayers, curses and chants, they "clear" the structure of extraneous influences.

Psychic bombardment takes on various forms. Here it manifests itself as strange depression, there as negative thoughts. Now it's anger, then it's a feeling of hopelessness. When we fall victim to it we hear ourselves saying, "I don't know what came over me."

How a High School Senior Dispelled Psychic Obstacles

I had seen Mona B. at several of my lectures, long before she approached me that day in June. "I've gotten so much out of your talks," she said. "I've just got to talk to you about a particular problem I have." Mona's "problem" was related to me in surprisingly adult language. For a girl her age she certainly had her wits about her, a girl with determination and will power.

She said, "It's getting very close to graduation time. Every day in class the whole room is filled with static electricity. You can just feel everyone's excitement and tension. We're all vying for first place; we all want to graduate with honors. Well, I want to be first. Is that wrong? I don't think so. I'm not an egotist, or anything like that. I just want to be the winner. But the tension in class is thick enough to cut through with a knife."

"That's exactly what you need," I told her. "A knife with which to cut through the tension—a psychic knife."

I explained to her that it was not wrong at all for her to want to be first in her class. This competition is wholesome and healthy in the young, as we all know. It creates character. I told her to continue wanting first place, to continue charging her desire with emotion. And I suggested the following as a curse against the psychic tension which interferes with human thinking:

Blade of Love, Blade of Love, cut through the darkness and make my way straight and light.

Blade of Love, Blade of Love, slice for me the mist and the web.

Cursed be darkness, cursed be dimness.

You can readily see what invoked this curse—Mona's own words pertaining to knives. This is important. Anyone can produce a potent curse to ward off evil, dispel darkness, and block psychic attack. Sometimes the best curse, the most effective curse, is the one which you create in view of your own situation. In this case, Mona wanted to cut through psychic bombardment. The idea of blade presents itself appropriately, but the blade should be Love, not anger, resentment, fear, or any such negative emotion.

Mona returned for the last days of school with her Blade of Love grasped firmly in her mind, a veritable Joan of Arc brandishing a mighty sword. The analogy is not an idle one, for Mona cut through the tension and clashing emotions in her classroom and came through with flying colors. Not only did she become the honor student but was appointed the valedictorian at graduation. In consequence, she also received an unexpected scholarship, the means to go on to the college of her choice. I cannot help but add that this case gave me particular personal pleasure, the joy at seeing one so young being able to start out in life with a positive attitude towards the unknown forces that so often invade our lives. Mona's Blade of Love proved to be an invincible weapon against unseen forces. Needless to say, once she was honored as Number One, all the students respected her. Mona enjoyed that rare privilege of being the center of attention and the friend to all, beautiful memories to carry forward into life.

How You Can Form Curses Against Psychic Bombardment

The Blade of Love, as I said, is but one form of curse against psychic attack. It came to mind under the circumstances I have mentioned. Your circumstances may require some variation on the theme. You may use any of the spells, prayers, curses and chants throughout this book. Or you may wish to form your own. When dealing with psychic bombardment it is sometimes the kind of psychic bombardment which suggests the curse to be used against it. In Mona's case, she herself said, "The tension in class is thick enough to cut through with a knife." The Blade of Love fit her needs exactly. But other types of psychic attack may bring to mind different "weapons." For example, hammer, machine gun, laser beam, etc.

The following curses against psychic bombardment are presented here for your edification, to be used as they stand, or to inspire you to create your own. You will know what is best for you.

The Hammer Curse

O Hammer of Heaven, come against this wicked darkness which assails me! Hammer! Hammer! Hammer it to pieces! Curse this obstruction to my progress! Hammer it away, Hammer it to dust.

The Machine Gun Curse

I curse you, O dark oppressor. With faith and hope I eject darts of fire with the rapidity of the machine gun. The trigger of love is in my hand. Every bullet pierces, explodes, and scatters the target of psychic blockage. Each bullet is a curse against obstruction.

The Laser Beam Curse

O impenetrable darkness, how penetrable you really are! I curse your effectiveness with the charge of laser beams. The laser beams of truth and love and hope shatter and dispel your power over me. The curse of the laser beam destroys you, melts you, renders you impotent.

The Sun Curse

O mighty fire of the sun, burn through this miasma of gloom which overtowers me. Explode, O Sunlight! Sever the bonds of darkness which chain me to mediocrity! Cut through, cut through, O Sun, curse this malevolence!

The Atomic Curse

I curse all that has gathered to block my way to success with the curse of light and love. My curse penetrates the thickness, it imbeds itself in the flesh of negativity, it festers and swells, it explodes with a mighty blast of mushrooming love, light, and joy.

The Thought Curse

I curse the unseen thing that binds me, interferes with me, blocks my path to success. With my thought, driven by emotion, feeling, and faith I pierce the very heart of psychic obstruction.

How a Young Housewife Thwarted the Aims of a Practicing Witch

One of the most extraordinary cases of psychic damage I have ever had the misfortune to see was in Mary Ann S. of Scranton, Pennsylvania. This young housewife came to me in tears. I could see that she was in her middle twenties, but by the sight of her, the circled eyes, the faint lines of her face, the haggard look, one could easily guess her age at over forty. Her sorrowful story almost moved me to tears, for it concerned the age-old problem of human suffering.

"My husband and I love each other," she told me. "We've been married almost four years. We're happy. At least we've been happy until recently. There's this young woman who moved into the apartment upstairs about six weeks ago, I've always tried to be friendly and, since she looked our age, I invited her into our home. Then something happened. I don't know what it is she brought with her, but my own apartment seems to be permeated with her presence, even when she isn't there. I noticed right away that she had some strange effect on my husband. It isn't like she did or said anything openly. It's more like she gets under his skin in some invisible way. I know this must sound strange to you, but it's true. I noticed that she gazes at him in a certain way, her dark eyes penetrating his very soul. My husband has said nothing, but I've noticed a difference in him. I know he's been hypnotized by her, or something like that. She's a very beautiful woman in a dark and sinister way and I sometimes get the feeling that he's thinking of her. I've got to do something now, because after weeks of this, I decided to be straightforward with her and air my feelings. She laughed at me! Standing right there in my own kitchen, she laughed, and said that she had every intention of using my husband for a while and that there was nothing I can do to stop her. She said she is a witch. When she left I felt like dying. How could I stop something like that? She hadn't done anything. My husband hadn't done anything. And yet, there it was, real as life, slowly creeping into reality, like some kind of slimy snake. I felt powerless until a friend told me about you. She made me promise to come see you. Can you help me with this strange thing?"

I listened to this poor woman's fears and anxieties and sympathy welled up in me. Extreme conditions call for extreme measures. She was obviously a religious person, kind and good, and undeserving of evil attack. It was her religious beliefs which helped me to help her.

I said, "You exhibit a great faith in the power of God. This woman you tell me of is apparently using curses in a negative way. Therefore we must turn to the Bible for the curse which will most effectively combat this attack you are under. I will give you a curse to use, taken from the Bible, for two reasons: one, because you have trust in the Bible, and two, because the Bible is itself imbued with the faith and conviction of millions of human beings. That accumulated power will help you to carry through this ordeal."

The curse I prepared for her comes from the twenty-seventh chapter of Deuteronomy:

Cursed be he that removeth his neighbor's landmark.

Cursed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way.

Cursed be he that perverteth the judgment of the stranger.

Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbor secretly.

Cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person.

Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law.

I instructed Mary Ann to intone this power curse every night before going to sleep, either orally or mentally, depending on what she wished. I particularly stressed the need to persevere, to reiterate the curse, to charge it with all the feeling she could muster. I did not wish to frighten her so I didn't tell her my reasons for stressing perseverance. But I was afraid she was up against something darker than any human being should have to confront.

It was about two weeks later when I heard from Mary Ann. The situation hadn't changed too much, but she was continuing to employ the curse nightly. About three days after that call, I received another. Mary Ann's house, at least (she was happy to report), no longer seemed filled with the witch's presence. The curse was beginning to work. The next call came the next day. The psychic atmosphere of her own home was restored to normal. Her husband began to look like himself, to pay more attention to her.

Two days later, Mary Ann called, and said, "Now I know it's working! I met you-know-who at the mailbox this morning. She looked at me something fierce, and said, 'What do you think you're doing?' I played coy, and muttered, 'Why, what do you mean?' She just turned and walked away, looking puzzled, so I know the curse is working."

I praised her for her strength of character and encouraged her to keep up the battle, not to rest on her laurels. Since the curse was working so well it was only logical to carry it through to whatever end it might be moving toward. That end became clear to me when Mary Ann and her husband showed up in my office, hand in hand, smiling, laughing, bubbling with enthusiasm.

Her husband was now in on the secret. He understood perfectly what his wife had told him about the woman upstairs, about our meeting, and about the curse. It was most gratifying to see this young couple so much in love fighting against intrusion together. Mary Ann happily told me that the witch had moved out of her apartment. She'd disappeared.

If that was the end of the story, I couldn't have asked for more. But it wasn't the end. The added blessing was this: Mary Ann called me up a few months after I had met her relieved husband. She was pregnant, and she was bursting with joy. This in itself warmed my heart, especially in this day and age when so many people are talking about abortion. It was a joy to know that there are still men and women who find it a blessing to have a child.

Here we see how a curse against psychic attack led to love, hope, joy, peace, harmony, and as an additional benefit—the blessing of new life.

Psychic Attack Can Be Thwarted

When you charge curses with feeling and direct them at the swirling invisible accumulations of psychic negativity, those dark clouds have to disperse. To use curses in this positive way is to acknowledge your own godlikeness. He who recognizes his own right to peace and plenty and who imbues curses with emotional charge will find that his road to success and happiness is wide open for him. Nothing can stand in his way.

chapter 3

How to Cast Spells That Create Friendship and Remove Enmity

Coleridge said: "Friendship is a sheltering tree." The tree analogy is appropriate, for, as any truly successful man knows, accomplishment consists not only of the accumulation of assets and possessions but also of the sharing of one's wealth with others. No sadder tale has been told than the story of the man who located a vast hidden treasure among the dunes of the Sahara, only to die of thirst in the forsaken desert. Even a million dollars in such a place will not purchase a single glass of life-saving water. Friends, like water, are necessary to life.

In a quite practical sense friends are needed when we wish to achieve something in life or when we want to get ahead. Show me the man who has no friends and I will show you a man who is spinning his wheels in this life. Even the man who has everything, if he is friendless, has nothing. This truth was brought home to me in the person of:

The Man Who Had No Friends

Dr. Benjamin V. is a highly successful orthodontist, a man who is paid as much as $50 for three or four minutes work. He owns two palatial homes, one in California, the other in Florida. He has two Cadillacs, and his beautiful wife—a Park Avenue model in her own right—owns two sports cars. When I met Doctor V., he was in his sixties, a virile, tanned, accomplished man, 25 years older than his lovely wife, who, incidentally, refers to him as “Lover.” And yet, for all of his apparent success and happiness, Doctor V. was a lonely man. In relating this problem to me, he said, rather morosely, “A man with money has no friends.” I was not impressed with his jaundiced philosophy, for I had heard it before, also from very rich people.

I said, “Everyone is surrounded by potential friends. The trick is to banish whatever it is that blocks communication.”

“You will have to explain that,” he said. “As far as I’m concerned, I’m surrounded by incompetents or else envious people too lazy to earn their own money.”

In spite of his gruff exterior, I sensed that the man was truly interested in exploring the possibility of being befriended. Many people, I have learned, put up harsh facades to hide themselves. They say and do things that are absolutely cruel, but they are mostly unconscious of their deeds, unaware that those whom they ridicule or denounce are in reality potential friends. I sensed this was the case with Doctor V., so I said, “Perhaps what is blocking you from true friendship is your own attitude toward other people. Maybe if you tried to see them more as fellow human beings rather than parasites and threats you would experience friendship.”

Doctor V. grew blustery at this. I simply waited for his righteous indignation to subside, then said, “What about the man who drove you here?”

“My chauffeur?” he asked.

“Yes,” I said. “What about him? How old is he? What does he do when he is not driving you around? What are his interests? His hobbies? How does he feel about life?”

Doctor V. looked perplexed. “I don’t know,” he said. I pressed on.

“Do you have maids?” I queried.

“One maid,” he said.

“And what about her? Is she single? Married? Does she have children? How does she like working for you and your wife?”

The doctor’s eyes narrowed on me suddenly. “What are you driving at?” he asked.

I explained to him how the process of labeling people tends to cut one off from meaningful human interaction. When we label someone “chauffeur” or “maid” and think about them in only that way, we automatically spellbind ourselves; we cut off our own avenue of approach to the individual. Whatever we label a person—“worthless,” “sinful,” “truckdriver,” “cook,” “troublemaker,” etc.—that label prevents any further development of human communication. Such labels are spells, negative spells. The terrible thing about such spells is this: we do not limit the other person in the least; we limit ourselves. If you think another person is stupid, you will never know how intelligent he or she is, even if that person is a genius. Your spell cuts you off from development. This is just one of the ways in which spells work negatively in our daily lives.

The doctor and I discussed and probed what he was doing so unconsciously, and he came to understand that if he was indeed friendless, the solution to his problem lay within himself.

I said, “Think of your attitude toward others as a demon. You are also the exorcist. Cast out that demon and let others free.”

Doctor V. changed his whole situation as well as his personal relationships by casting the following spell:

I cast you out, demon of intrusion, along with your influence to separate me from my fellow human beings. Be bound, demon of blindness, that I may see those around me.

He made a daily practice of reciting this spell orally and mentally, day and night, until it was so imbued with energy and feeling that it began to disperse his own attitude toward others. The results of his spell-casting came known to me via a letter which I feel I must share with you. It points up the kind of changes you too can experience in your own life. Here's the letter:

Santa Barbara, Calif.

Dear Mr. Laurence:

It took me a little while to get used to thinking in terms of spells, but due to certain developments, I am constrained to write to you immediately. For one thing, about two weeks after reciting the spell daily, I realized that I was observing all people differently, even strangers on the street. How interesting people really are!

I think you will be interested in hearing that my attitude towards my chauffeur and maid has also changed. In fact, they are Hank and Barbara now, not "chauffeur" and "maid." And here's one for you! Hank is quite a chess player! I haven't beaten him yet, and we play every Saturday evening. In fact, I have even rearranged my busy schedule in order to enjoy his company.

I can only say that you were quite right in your analysis of my behavior. You were also right when you said I am surrounded by potential friends. I have found friends in almost everyone I come into contact with, including Stanley W., whom I always believed was "out to get me" in business.

Speaking of business, I have some associates I would like to send to you for instruction. If this is all right with you, please let me know. I think everyone should learn how to cast spells like this!

Sincerely yours,

Ben V.

I received another letter from the doctor which informed me of his increasing feeling of security through growing friendships. It was a warm letter, reflecting the warmth of newfound friends he was meeting and enjoying. I could easily sense his joy and the new fullness of his life. As Coleridge said: "Friendship is a sheltering tree."

The Spell That Explodes Adversity

At some time or another everyone wants to increase friendship and to decrease enmity. Everyone wants many friends and few enemies. Adversity, we know, often visits us in the form of human beings. A neighbor, a co-worker, a classmate, even a relative may become the channel for adversity which interferes in our lives, blocks our progress, or oppresses our spirit. Adversity itself, however, is a psychic force, energy negativized. It is the recognition of this fundamental truth which makes it possible to cast a spell that can destroy adversity. In ancient times adversity was often seen as the person through whom it was manifested, which is why we read of people casting spells on other people. But human beings are only channels, vessels, funnels. It is wise to bear this in mind when casting spells, so as not to bring undue hardship down upon innocent bystanders.

James T. learned to use the "Adversity-Exploding Spell" once he realized that his adversary was not his employer. He came to me complaining of his boss's callousness and disregard. "He's a slavedriver," James told me. "He works me to the bone 40, 50 hours a week, for peanuts! I'm always late with the rent. The light and gas bills are due right now. My wife needs some clothes but I can't afford them. We're living from hand to mouth. And why? Just because my boss is a nasty, inhuman wretch who takes his misery out on me."

I said, "Adversity is an abstraction, not a human being. Whether your boss is miserable or not, whether he is antagonistic toward you or not, I want you to cast a spell using your own psychic energy against adversity, not against your employer. If you want him to change toward you, you have to change that which is also afflicting him." I gave him this spell:

I bind you, adverse influences. With hope and power greater than myself I cast this spell against your effectiveness. Disperse, O clinging hindrance. Vanish, O suffocating darkness. Be gone with you!

In a quite inexplicable manner James' boss altered his attitude. James later told me that he recited this power spell mentally whenever he saw his boss at work, even if he was only passing by. A week and a half later there came the day of reckoning.

James related: "It was a Thursday. I was loading a truck at the dock. Mr. L. came along and says, 'Drop that, and get Number Two machine going.' So I went to the machine. Ten minutes later, he was back, and he says, 'Those guys on the dock need help. Give them a hand, will you?' Well, normally, I'd be ready to blow my stack, but I cast the spell mentally, right then and there, stopped the machine again, and returned to the dock. That evening when I went to punch out at the clock, Mr. L. invited me into his office. I was expecting some unwarranted chewing out. Was I surprised! 'I've been watching you work, Jim,' he said. He was still kind of grouchy, but even at that, he said, 'I like the way you've been following orders. All I ever get around here is grumbling and complaints. I know some of my requests are unreasonable at times, but running this shop is no joke. Maybe I don't always show it, but I appreciate it when a man follows orders. This is a small business, but take it from me, if you keep on like you're doing, you'll be rewarded. I need more guys like you around here.'"

And James was rewarded. I saw him at a lecture about two months later. Grinning from ear to ear he held up his two hands for me to see. I understood the meaning of the gesture immediately. His hands were clean of oil and grime, the hands of an office worker, which is exactly what he had become. He is now the Office Manager of Mr. L's company, earning almost twice as much as he had been. He was so enthused about the spell against adversity that he continued using it in other areas. It was with obvious glee that he told me, "I even used it where the utility bills are concerned, and guess what? Believe it or not, I received a refund from the light company!" I believed it, all right. I've seen the power spell work in many lives, in small ways and in big ways. Recited with emotion, imbued with feeling, charged with energy, it can't fail to explode adversity in anyone's life.

How to Cast the Spell That Attracts Friends

On a recent trip to Los Angeles I met a young man who was new to the bustling big city and who felt swamped by its enormity. This feeling of being closed in extended to his place of work, a huge, sprawling business complex in which he felt like an ant. "It's so weird," he stated. "People passing each other day in and day out, all so busy, and yet never getting to know one another. I'm surrounded by people all day long, and yet, not one of them can I call friend. There must be about 4,000 employees at the place. Surely one of them can become a friend!"

The young man's dilemma is a common one today, one of the less desirable results of mass production and conglomerate corporation. The individual is lost in the vastness of business empires. But no one need remain friendless today. Old powers are as vital and effective today as they ever were, if only we will come to realize its potential. I gave the young man this spell:

I call upon the magnetic forces of the earth to fill me, vitalize me, activate me. I am a magnet, drawing people to me, people who will like me, desire my company, help me. Draw, O magnet, draw unto me loyal and true friends!

Believe you are this magnet and people will be drawn to you miraculously. The aforementioned young man experienced a spectacular transformation. Friends began to mushroom all around him. He was elected vice-president of the late shift's "in" group; was asked to join the bowling league; befriended an influential co-worker who was instrumental in seeing that he got ahead in the company; and not to be undervalued, he also became highly popular with many female employees. His new use of potent spells and his equally new use of his own psychic energy transformed his whole life in a very literal way.

Spells That Annihilate Enemies

While adversity is an abstraction and may manifest through human beings, it cannot be denied that there are indeed some people who are openly and obviously negative, destructive, and mean. You may think I am going to suggest some spells with which to combat them, but I am not. At least the spells I have in mind are not designed to "fight fire with fire," for to behave the same way as enemies do is to become an enemy oneself. No, I am going to present for your edification a series of spells which you can use to effectively combat those individuals who are deliberately adverse and antagonistic without the casting of the spells creating any karmic reaction for you.

These spells came into being after I gave a lecture on "How to Deal with Your Enemies" in San Diego, California. As such a lecture will do, it drew those people who were pointedly interested in the topic. There was, for instance, Mary M., a teacher, who was having problems with the school's principal; Ralph de R., a cab-driver from Houston, Texas, who had an enemy in a neighbor; Bill S. of Los Angeles, who knew a man who meant him actual physical harm; and Sondra P., a dancer, whose ambitions were being thwarted by a lecherous director. These members of the audience all had a common problem: a real threat to their happiness in the form of a human being. The spells I gave them are as follows:

Spirit of Friendship, Spirit of Love, give unto my enemy all that he desires that his cup should run over.

I bind you, demon of enmity. Be you removed from this being who comes against me.

May peace and happiness, light and love, shine forth in all their radiance to brighten the life of this my adversary.

May the vines of peace entwine about your negative attitude and crush it to death. May you then, O enemy mine, be free.

The manner in which these spells worked in the lives of the aforementioned clients is at once gratifying and uplifting. Why such lovely spells against people who are plotting and planning destruction and harm? The Apostle Paul said it best: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." (Romans 12:20). Experience has proven to me time and again that turning the other cheek and casting potent love spells takes care of unfeeling enemies in short order! If you have enemies, set the universal law into motion by using these spells or similar spells, and see for yourself.

Prayers for Discovering A Goldmine of Endless Riches

Until quite recently not many people thought of taking seriously the prayer: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." (Matthew 7:7). And even those who took it seriously were not likely to take it literally. But there are people who have the uncanny ability to pray for gold, money, riches, wealth, and who receive what they pray for. This ability need not be uncanny, however. You can pray power prayers for all you need, want, and desire. "Prayer," as Horne noted, "is the voice of faith." Moreover, prayer has been proven to be the voice of cosmic law. Note the recent experiments with plants and praying, how they respond to emotion-charged prayers. Metaphorically speaking, the same kind of prayers can produce money-trees and make them grow, blossom, and bloom.

How a Teenage Girl Grew Rich Overnight

There is no faith like that in the young, which is probably why Jesus advised us to be as children. Today more and more youth are turning to the power of prayer, not only the standard supplications of traditional religion, but also to the vital power of magical and mystical prayer. June S. is such a youngster.

I met June when she attended one of my lectures with her parents. During the after-lecture coffee hour, she came up to me and said, "I believe in the power of prayer as you presented it. Something inside me has always believed in that. But I've never known how to use such prayer. I wish you would tell me more, because I'd like to do something concrete to help my father. He's had a bad heart attack and our bills are mounting up because he's out of work. But I can't go to work to help out. I have to stay in school."

I was quite taken with this sympathetic 14-year-old. I am always drawn to those who wish to help others, so I said, "Then you should pray the 'Prayer of Omniscience'." This prayer is as follows:

Let the scales drop from my eyes that I may see where others are blind. Open my heart for feeling, my mind for understanding. Let me see that which is the answer to our problem.

Every night before she went to sleep, June would charge this simple prayer with emotion. She followed this format every evening for weeks, remaining patient, open to inspiration, receptive to higher wisdom. Prayers put you in touch with unseen and often unknown forces; forces which can and will help the seeker. The forces certainly helped young June. One night she dreamed of a site in the country where a house used to stand. In the dream an old man with a white beard and white hair directed her to a spot, and said, "The bedroom used to be here. Dig here. Dig here." June awoke, forgetting the dream until that afternoon when on her bicycle she passed the old site.

In a daze, as she wrote to tell me, she approached the spot where the dream-image had pointed and she dug a hole. "I dug and dug," she wrote, "until I thought I'd collapse. I never knew digging could be such hard work, but I kept on, not knowing what to expect. Sometimes I felt foolish, but other times something gripped my heart, something like hope. After about an hour of digging, (I had broken four big sticks, using them as shovels), I hit something. It looked like a leatherbound book, a large book. I freed it from the damp earth, brushed it off, and discovered that it was a stamp collection. My heart fell. I was really disappointed, even though it was still exciting that my dream could tell me such a thing. I was disappointed because I thought I was going to unbury a treasure of some kind. Well, when I got that stamp album home, we found out that it is a treasure! Daddy took it to town and got it appraised. I could have died! The men who examined it with magnifying glasses said the book just as it was is worth at least $10,000!"

The last I heard from June, she permitted her father to sell the collection of stamps to a collector in New York City. The price received was $12,320. Suddenly rich, June called me from 2000 miles away, to say: "I bought Daddy a new car and Mom a fur coat. I've got the niftiest wardrobe now! Thank you so much for helping me. Everything is all right now. I can pay Daddy's doctor bills and he can rest without worrying about money for a while. We're banking the rest for a rainy day."

The Prayer of Omniscience has been used by other clients also with varying but gratifying results. It has a meditative effect on you, places your mind in a state of reception, opens doors to higher consciousness. You must charge the prayer with emotion, however, as I have constantly stressed because it is important, but you must also blank your conscious mind, empty it of preconceived notions as to how your problem should be solved. June had remained emptied of preconceptions, had remained receptive, and in a dream she learned where to find riches. You may have a similar experience, or again, your experience may vary. The vital issue is that the Prayer of Omniscience works, if you will let it.

He Prayed for Hundreds and Received Thousands

Barry H. is 29 years old, single, and unemployed. When I met him he woefully informed me that he had exactly $20 to his name. Opposed to that sum was his due room rent of $40, a car payment, utility bills, and numerous dunning collectors of overdue charges. His situation was, as he himself said, "a mess." He was a personable young man, but at the same time, rather fatalistic. I learned this from his frequent references to astrology, not that astrology is fatalistic, but Barry's approach to this ancient science left much to be desired. He was too conscious of planetary influences, believing there was nothing for him to do but live out whatever the stars brought. In the end, however, his belief in astrology helped me to help him, for it made me remember that Pluto is the god of wealth. This is important here, for there is no point in telling a Buddhist to turn to the Bible or telling a Christian to turn to Buddha. Barry could identify with the power of astral influence. Therefore, a prayer designed to activate the Greek and Roman god of wealth was in order. Remember that prayers work no matter in what frame of reference they are placed. Otherwise, only Christian prayers would be effective in the world, and we know today that this is not so. People from all walks of life, from all religious backgrounds, pray with fervent hope and receive answers. In Barry's case, astrology was the key. He had to have limitations removed and he needed the aid of a god higher than himself. I therefore gave him this prayer:

O gods of the universe, I beseech thee to show favor unto me. Remove from my path the thorns of obstruction and make clear for me the road to success and happiness. Hear my prayer, O great and mighty Pluto, concealer of treasures, hear my plea, and reveal to me the source of wealth.

It was this prayer that Barry intoned nightly for almost three weeks, at the end of which time I gave him a short Plutonian prayer which was used by the ancient Greeks to invoke the aid of the god of wealth. The potent power prayer is:

Pluto, Pluto, my voice streaks across space to your willing ear. Pour out your riches. O giver of riches.

I didn't hear from Barry for the longest time, and then it was by letter, for I had in the meanwhile moved on to another lap of my lecture tour of the United States. He wrote: "When I left you that day, I took my $20 and went to the racetrack. I thought I was being foolish until I saw that in the third race there was a horse named Pluto's Heir! And then, too, I wanted to put the prayers to the test. If they really work, I said to myself, then they'll work at a racetrack. And they did! I put the $20 on Pluto's Heir to win. The odds were up to 40-to-1 at post time. And the horse came in first! People thought I was a madman, the way I jumped up and down. I stayed at the track all that day, betting every subsequent race. I lost some (I think my excitement got in the way of my prayerful concentration) but I won plenty. That first day I took in over $600. The second day I won $753. The third day I started out with $50 and came away with only $170. But the next day I started out with $100 and won over $800! I could go on like this for pages! Right now, as I write this letter, I've got $3,775 in my savings account. Tomorrow I am going to place $3000 on one horse—yes, Pluto's Heir is running again."

I am very interested to hear from Barry again. Given odds of 40-to-1, a bet of $3000, if the horse wins, can turn into $120,000 like magic!

How and Why Prayers Can Bring Riches Into Your Life

Many people ask me to explain how prayer makes money literally "fall from heaven." Some of these people have used these powerful prayers, have invoked the aid of God, angels, astral influences, planets, gods, etc., and have benefited wonderfully from them. But to one and all I usually reply that the answers to such questions are probably hidden beneath tons of earth in tombs and crypts. The point I try to make is this: does it really matter what makes the prayers work so long as they do indeed work? The most one can say is that through the process of prayer some mystical and real connection is made between the human being and superhuman agencies. Whether these agencies are called God, Spirit, influence, magic, sorcery, or what have you, is of little importance. When people in need find themselves counting out 10's and 20's and 50's and even 100's, they are usually thankful that prayer works. Some people feel that they must propitiate the gods in return for their blessings, which is all right, too. For example, Jeannie L., a college junior at U.C.L.A., likes to burn expensive roses to Pluto every full moon in gratitude for his munificence. She tells me that since she began uttering Plutonian prayers she has not wanted for a thing. She thus feels constrained to show some form of thankfulness. The fact remains, however, that even if Jeannie were to cease her offerings, the prayers would continue to bring money into her life. If you need money badly enough, if you have the emotional fortitude to use power prayers that invoke unseen mysterious forces, then no request is too big.

Power Prayers That Invoke Mysterious Forces to Increase Riches

The mysterious forces to which I refer often have names, although these names by no means describe the forces themselves. Be that as it may, it appears that when one can identify with a name and can successfully intone an emotionally-charged prayer, that force responds with aid in a miraculous manner. This is best illustrated by actual cases in which prayer brought the desired riches.

For example, I can mention Ellen R., a widowed housewife and mother of three children, who came to me in desperation. This humble woman wanted no more than to be able to pay the rent so she could keep a roof over the heads of her loved ones. She intones this prayer to Hestia, the Greek goddess of home and hearth:

O wonderful and warm Hestia, please help me to help my children. All I ask is enough money to pay for the use of this home, your temple. Heed my prayer, O Hestia, goddess of the hearth.

Ellen says this prayer nightly before falling off to sleep. The first month she tried it the rent was paid in a miraculous manner. Her landlord came to her and asked her if she would patch a quilt for his wife, in return for which he gave her a rent receipt stamped PAID IN FULL. At the close of the second month, she received a buyer for an antique vase she had up for sale. Month after month something has occurred to make it possible for her to make her rent payments.

Joe B. is a door-to-door salesman who wasn't having much luck until he started using the "Prayer to Jupiter," the god of good fortune. The prayer is:

Jupiter, Jupiter, god of the gods, rain down upon me the generosity for which you are famous.

It's a simple little prayer, and yet Joe says that he emotes it before knocking on any door—and his sales have quadrupled! At the rate of $50 commission per sale, he happily reports that he has days often when he takes home $200 and $300.

Another simple but potent prayer is the one to Diana, the Moon Goddess:

I pray thee, Diana, great goddess, to multiply to me wealth and substance.

Karen H. and another client, Jane P. both use this one, and both women tell me they have experienced joyful and miraculous changes in their financial conditions. Diana, the Moon Goddess, is a powerful source of help. The moon has in all ages been invoked for increase. In the old days the Moon Goddess was prayed to when one wished an increase in flocks, herds, family, and so on. Today the need is coin of the realm, money, and the same prayer to the same goddess works for many people.

The waxing and waning moon—signifying increase and decrease—has in many cultures been the goddess of plenty. Thus the old ritual of looking at the new moon over the left shoulder, taking out money, and turning it over so that the moon—the Increaser—would multiply it. Some of my female clients utter their prayers for money to Hecate, the Greek moon goddess of good fortune:

Mother Hecate, pregnant with fruitful blessing, give birth now for me. Pour forth thine bounty that this, thy servant, may know peace and prosperity.

All of these prayers have worked magically in the lives of people who have had genuine financial needs. They can work for you, given your trust and ability to emot, to feel strongly, to emanate desire and strength of conviction.

Remember this: money is plentiful. Mints are filled with it. It flows like water over this land. If you can become a magnet for that flow, money will gravitate to you like bees to flowers. Infinite riches are in store for the man who can pray hard and long.

chapter 5

How to Chant Your Way to Peace and Power

Bill T. was in dire need of help, instant help, powerful help, lasting help. And yet, he was a man who avowed: "I don't believe in this new-fangled stuff about meditation and chanting. That's for kids and hippies!"

I met Bill through his wife, a woman in distress, worried about the health and nervous condition of her husband of 25 years. The poor woman had to literally "drag" Bill to see me. He was so obnoxious in the beginning that I invited him to leave, saying, "I'm not here to force peace and power on you. If you want to continue in your weakness and bad health, that's your business."

Bill changed his tune somewhat, but said: "What is all this stuff about chanting? That's all my wife has been talking about ever since she started coming to your lectures. She keeps saying I should learn how to chant. Why? I'm relaxed. I'm calm."

"Bill," I said, "you're about as relaxed as a kid on a pogo-stick. Your metabolism is going like crazy, and you're sitting in that chair like a rocket prepared for take-off. Your fingers tremble when you light a cigarette, you've crossed and uncrossed your legs about 15 times in just as many minutes, and you fidget constantly. It's no wonder your wife is worried about you."

His wife had told him that chanting would calm his nerves, renew his mind and body, and relieve the tension of work he was suffering. I explained to him how chanting can provide inner peace here and now. If I have ever met a man who needed inner peace, it was Bill. On the surface, he was materially well off and, according to him, in need of nothing. He was apparently a success—distinctive, self-controlled, a man of means. He thought he was well off physically, spiritually, and mentally. But when I probed and got beneath his glossy facade I discovered that he and his wife were virtually strangers, his only son felt alienated from him, and he had no sense of accomplishment after years and years of hard work.

Bill, I learned, while clinging desperately to a faith in a Santa-Claus-in-the-sky God, had never really been in touch with methods for producing the "promises" in his own life. I explained to him how chanting produces a meditative condition and how meditation transcends consciousness and the million and one thoughts which sap our energies. Bill's ears pricked up when I mentioned Maharishi and his highly successful technique of Transcendental Meditation. Bill listened with obvious skepticism.

I said, "Some of our country's most famous people chant mantras and meditate. The power of positive-nonthinking is helping them to cope with the stresses and strains of their specialized fields."

Bill wanted to know who these famous people are, and I said, "Joe Namath, for one. Then there is cover girl Samantha Jones; Major General Franklin M. Davis, Commandant of the U. S. Army War College; UCLA basketball star Bill Walton, and 25 Trappist monks in Spencer, Massachusetts. Maharishi gives each of his pupils a mantra to chant and the chanting puts them in touch with higher-than-conscious forces. You can do the same thing by chanting. You can improve yourself physiologically, psychologically, and physically."

My erstwhile reluctant visitor decided that he would like to "try it out," so I gave him this Indian chant:

Om Ah Hung Vajra Guru Pema Siddhi Hung

I instructed Bill to repeat this chant at least ten times at each sitting, orally or mentally, at work or before retiring. In a week's time he was already feeling its effects. Two weeks later he came to see me and I could see the results for myself. He was not fidgety, nor rigid, nor "uptight." He was smiling, restful as he spoke with me, his voice steady and sure, his eyes straight ahead. He was indeed relaxed, self-possessed, and full of confidence. I saw him again a month later and the improvements in his physical and mental conditions were startling.

He said, "I don't know how I could have doubted you. That chant you gave me is magic!"

It is magic!

How Chanting Improves Your Mental and Physical Performance

The literal translation of the above power chant is not necessary to its effectiveness, but for the benefit of those who would like to know what it means:

Om	Ah	Hung	Vajra	Guru	Pema	Siddhi	Hung
Body	Speech	Mind	Truth	Self	Lotus	Power	All

I have seen this simple but powerful chant work miracles in the lives of businessmen, housewives, convicts, dope addicts, priests, ministers, politicians, and hundreds of other people. Why it works is probably explainable by some Tibetan Lama; but that it works is obvious to anyone who uses it or who has met others who use it. Tests have shown that the metabolic rate goes down during meditative chanting. Harvard University studies show that oxygen consumption during chanting reaches a level which is found in other people only after they have had about seven hours sleep. Who doesn't want a "good night's sleep" in 20 or 30 minutes?

What this can mean to you is at once exciting and earth-shaking. Chanting can change your blood composition and increase your alpha brain waves. Consequently, you increase your physical and mental performance because of the new peace you experience within. Meditative chanting clears out the psyche, so to speak, and permits new energies to flow through into your daily life. You can tap that vast reservoir of unused mental capacity by chanting.

Chants That Expand Awareness, Clarify Thought, and Enhance Creativity

Diane W., a college student, came to me for a chant which would help her to increase her consciousness. Her request did not surprise me, for I am accustomed to having high school and college age youth make this request. It usually comes from those youngsters who desire expanded consciousness but who do not wish to take drugs to achieve their end. Harvard researchers found that many people who had been taking LSD and using marijuana stopped using drugs altogether within two years of taking up meditative chanting. Consciousness expansion through chanting can lead to increased awareness, brighter thoughts, and greater creativity, which is why I readily respond to such youthful requests. I gave Diane this chant:

Guru, Guru, light my life
Guru, Guru, lift my heart
Guru, Guru, all-knowing Guru
Show me in, show me out.

Chants of this type put you in touch with your inner self, help you to tap creative energy, permit you to function under stress and strain of daily living. The following chants are at your disposal, to help you achieve the peace which precedes action, fulfillment, and effectiveness.

Chants for Relieving Stress

Void, void, void is pressure
Take away, take away, take away all
Void, void, void is heaviness
Take away, take away, take away all.

I am calm, calm, calm
Restful, peaceful, tranquil Pressures come, pressures go
I am calm, calm, calm.

Pax, O Pax, god of Peace
I intone your name for rest and ease
Pax—Pax—Pax—Pax
(Repeat ten times in a hushed whisper.)

Begone, O stress; begone, O strain
Relieve me now of pressing pain;
Begone, O burden; begone, O toil
Implant thy peace in willing soil.

Whispering palms of peace and rest come waiting through my very being like gentle wings of doves of love.

Chants for Improved Efficiency

Ability, ability, fill my veins. Stability, stability, be my reins. Give me peace, give me power; sharpen my wits, heighten my capability. Ability, stability, capability are mine this day.

I am restful, peaceful, better and greater. Creative thought emerges from within, increases my powers, lifts me up.
Rest, peace, efficiency, mine to have, mine to hold, mine to use.

Competence, skill, ingenuity and talent, give to me excellence, achievement, and success. Fill me, lift me, imbue me, pervade me. Competence, skill, ingenuity and talent, be friendly and gracious to me this day.

Chants for Well-Being

Tranquility, silence, quietude, health. These I make my own; these I conjure for aid, support, and succor. Peace is mine, strength is mine, effectiveness is mine.

Energy charging
 Ideas enlarging
 Focus pointing
 My efforts anointing.

Stillness to my mind, rest to my body, height to my spirit, nimbleness to my fingers, adroitness to my movement, excellence to my act. Strength to my muscle, vitality to my blood, life to my limb, power to my brain.

When you first start chanting, extraneous thoughts may interfere with your progress, but with perseverance and determination, you will eventually find yourself floating in free space, so to speak—bypassing your thoughts, more aware of the you inside your body. This is called the state of being, a psychic condition which is conducive to the peace and power you want. How you position yourself in order to chant depends entirely on you. Some chanters like to sit straight in a chair (not rigidly), close their eyes and intone the chant. But I know people who chant mentally and quite well in subways, buses, automobiles, and in offices during working hours. Mary L., a housewife from Canton, Ohio, wrote and told me that she chants while doing her housework. Chanting requires no rituals, ceremonies, or mental calisthenics. You need not assume distorted bodily positions, stare at objects in space, control your breathing or hypnotize yourself into a state of neutrality. And yet, intoning these chants can bring you greater productivity and serenity which will astound people who know you. Chanting creates a new aura for you, an invisible shield of peace and contentment that others cannot define, but are highly aware of its presence.

He Chanted His Way Out of the Hospital and Saved $100 a Day

A wonderful example of what I mean is Arthur B. of Topeka, Kansas. Arthur is in his early thirties, and yet, due to excessive strain and stress in business, he suffered a heart attack which put him in the hospital. His room was costing him $100 per day when I met him. He was not responding to convalescence. The doctors said his spirits were too low and they didn't know what to do about that. They could mend his heart, revitalize his body with good food, keep him warm and comfortable, but they could not lift his spirits. Chanting could—and did! I gave Arthur the last chant listed above under "Chants for Well-Being," and in a little over a week, he was on his feet, eager to be released from the hospital. Today he is back in business, working harder than before, but—and this is important—he is using 80 percent less physical energy to accomplish his goals! Chanting has opened his mind, thrown back the shutters of obstruction, and released vast amounts of psychic energy for his use. Arthur intones his chant every morning over breakfast and every evening before falling to sleep. He has even put a little tune to it and he writes that he hums and sings this chant all through his day at work.

Power Chants That Draw Invisible Forces to You

This brings me to those chants which can channel superhuman powers and direct them to you, to anyone who wants to change his life, remove obstacles to progress, better himself, disarm enemies or simply feel healthier, stronger and more able. I placed the "Peace Chants" first because we are all familiar with what happens when the unpeaceful misuse power. Chant the foregoing chants regularly, get yourself in a state of higher being, and then use the following Power Chants to get what you want out of life.

Whatever your individual need may be—a stronger body, help to overcome odds, a defense against negative people, psychic support—the following chants may be of help to you.

Sam S. is an amateur boxer. He came to me because he wanted more physical power, greater prowess, increased agility. He wants to be a professional boxer. Here's the chant he intones before entering the ring:

Blood of fire, muscles of steel, feet with wings, fists with might. Strength in my left hand, power in my right, my body is ready to win every fight.

Chanting sets up a pattern of invisible energy waves between the chanter and potent cosmic forces. How they do this no one knows. Sam S. knows chanting works every time he knocks down a worthy opponent, every time he hears that ten-count. Therefore I append these chants which have been used successfully by people from all walks of life for various and sundry reasons.

Chant to Mars, God of War

O great and mighty Mars, conqueror and avenger, impart to me strength, force, vigor, and power. O god of war, god of might, imbue me with thy potency and stamina. O great and mighty Mars, lend thy fierceness, share thy nerve; that I may excel, dominate, and surpass.

The Oak Chant

Oak of ages, oak of towering strength, tall and indomitable, sturdy and undefeatable, I concentrate now on your omnipotence and I draw upon it, gain it, use it.

The Chant for Physical Strength

Iron and steel, bands of wire, these are the components of my body. Legs of iron, hands of steel, muscles of unbreakable wire, Iron, steel, bands of wire am I.

Chant to Hermes

O messenger of the gods, intercede for me, and wing to me quickly the authority of Zeus, the wisdom of Athene, the ability of Apollo, and the strength of Hercules.

Many Use the Technique of Chanting

It is estimated that over 350,000 people—men, women, and youth—are communicating with their inner selves through chants. In this approach to the suprahuman, begging and petitioning is fruitless, and you are called to muster all of your innate gifts and abilities. Through the process of chanting you can draw down immeasurable power which cannot be labeled, but which is often called God. By taking God at His word—"Know ye not that ye are sons of God?"—and charging your chants with psychic energy, true emotion, and electric anticipation, you can change the unchangeable, create the uncreated, and enjoy the unforeseen.

Chants have worked for hundreds of years in one form or another, because they have always been uttered by human beings who have channeled cosmic forces, unknown forces, mysterious forces. You can do likewise. What shamans have done, what magicians have done, what witches have done, what gurus have done, what saints have done—you can do!

How to Curse Lack and Poverty to Increase Your Wealth

One of the most beautiful moments of my career occurred when a seven-year-old girl named Annie put a curse to work with the faith and simplicity that puts many grown-ups to shame. She came up to me after a meeting in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, unabashed and delightfully open. She extended her little hand, and said, "Hello, Mr. Laurence. You say nice things." I shook the young lady's hand and thanked her for the compliment. I expected her to go then, perhaps in search of her mother, but she just stood there, looking up at me with big brown eyes. Aware of her intense interest, I excused myself from the trio of adults to whom I was speaking and I knelt on the floor in front of Annie. "Would you like to say something?" I asked.

"I want a TV set for my bedroom," she said.

The statement perplexed me. "I don't think I understand," I admitted.

With clearness and forthrightness Annie explained to me how she has been wanting a private television set for her room, a luxury her mother and father would not permit due to financial reasons.

Annie said, "But you said we can have anything we want. How can I have a TV set if we don't got any money? Can I have a TV even if Daddy doesn't make a lot of money? I can't ask for it again or Mommy will get mad. She says I pester too much."

"Well, let's just see what we can do to alter this situation," I said to my young believer. "First of all, your mother is right about pestering. There is no point in upsetting her with constant pleading. I'm sure she would buy you a TV if she could. So let's attack the real problem, the lack of money, the condition blocking your father from making more money."

Little Annie understood every word I said. She stood there wide-eyed and clinging to my every word, her ears tuned for the secret to success. I spoke to her as I would to an adult.

I said, "Let's keep this a secret between you and me. I will give you a curse to say, a curse against lack and poverty, and you say it every night before you go to sleep."

The curse:

I curse the block to money. I curse the thing that keeps Daddy from earning more. I curse all that makes him a slave.

I didn't see Annie again for over two months. Upon a return trip to Philadelphia, I looked her parents up and dropped by after being invited. Annie's mother was as gracious and kind as I knew her to be at meetings and lectures. She showed me around her home, quite a nice home, and I noticed the portable television set in what was obviously Annie's room. Annie was not present at the time, but I asked, "How did Annie come by the television set?"

She was surprised that I knew all about Annie's desire for a set, so I let her in on the secret. She laughed at that, and said, "That makes the whole thing even more remarkable! I was amazed when my husband's boss suddenly gave him a bonus—out of the clear blue!—but this is even more amazing. Annie never told me she was using a curse like that! I wonder if she was."

When Annie returned from school her mother and I both learned that she had indeed been using the curse, faithfully, every single night. And it was following the ninth night (Annie kept count!) that her father received the unexpected money. And it was after the tenth night that her father decided to purchase a surprise TV set for her.

Annie said, "But it wasn't a surprise. I knew he would buy it because I cursed everything that blocked him."

I departed that home a richer man for having had such an experience with this wonderful little girl. It was a source of personal joy to see her smiling, certain, self-confident. She had simply obeyed ancient but powerful processes, the same processes you can utilize to your own benefit, any time you wish. Curses against lack automatically bring plenty. Properly used, curses are prayers against negativity that blocks success.

How a High School Boy Cursed Obstruction and Won a Car

Barry M. lives in Tempe, Arizona. He came to me with a very definite desire to own his own automobile, and with the definite idea that it was impossible for him to have it. During consultation, I told him the tale about Annie. He listened, but didn't seem impressed.

He said, "That's a cute story, Mr. Laurence, but that sort of thing won't work for me. I don't know anyone with the kind of money I need. Even if my father had the money, he's got so many debts that they would eat it right up."

I suggested that now that he had listed all the reasons why he couldn't have the car, he might start by looking at the reasons why he could. When we dwell on the negative side of things, our thoughts alone set up obstructing patterns which block us from obtaining our desires. Even the power of reason, which deals with objective facts for the most part, can become an obstacle to achievement and success. If you want magic to work, then you have to think magically. You have to believe, not rationalize. You have to suspend nonbelief, open yourself to forces higher than yourself, forces which cannot be analyzed under a microscope. Barry was his own worst enemy. He even found it hard to believe that Annie had gotten what she wanted most by applying childlike faith to her curse against negativity. So I decided to teach the boy a lesson in faith. I gave him this curse:

I curse the block to money. I curse the thing that keeps my desire from me. I curse all that makes me a slave to poverty.

Sound familiar? It isn't much different than the curse used by Annie to obtain a television set.

Barry took the curse home with him and used it day and night—in all, seven times! Three days later he was back, gesticulating wildly, near bursting with joy. He had arrived in his own car. Bubbling with excitement, Barry cried, "It's parked right outside. Come on. You've got to see this to believe it! I won it! I had this raffle ticket in my pocket. I've got lots of them, but I never really expected to win a car! But this one was the winning ticket! A gas station had this raffle and I got a phone call telling me I'd won!"

I went with the exuberant young man and there at the curb was his pride and joy: a new fire-engine red Corvette. I was happy for him, but, at the same time, I did not wish the all-important lesson to go unheeded. I calmed him down somewhat, and then told him the facts of life, that I had given him a curse which was essentially the same as little Annie's. Barry got the point. In fact, he became so contrite that I was afraid I had ruined his fun. He had learned a lesson about faith, so I slapped him on the shoulder and ordered him to enjoy his car. The loud squealing of his tires confirmed the truth that curses do work!

How You Can Use the Power of Curses

The power to curse effectively is as old as the Bible. The effectiveness of curses is proportionate to your non-doubt and positive belief. The Bible says: "Verily I say unto you that whosoever shall say unto this mountain be thou removed and be thou cast into the sea and shall not doubt in his heart but shall believe, those things which he sayeth shall come to pass and he shall have whatsoever he sayeth." Curses can work for you, but only when you are believing, not doubting; responding not questioning.

The Power Curses of the Exorcists

The film and the book The Exorcist is, of course, quite famous now. But what many people don't know is that this story of Satan's ability to possess the soul of a human being is based upon an actual case history! William Beatty, the author of The Exorcist, researched the 1949 case very carefully before writing his book. I raise this point because the book and the movie makes clear that exorcisms work. And what is an exorcism? An exorcism is a curse—a curse against the Devil, against soul-robbing, against possession, against negativity. Most of the words used by priests and exorcists begin with, "I bind you . . ." or "I cast you out . . ." That is, the exorcism is a bona fide curse against evil.

The Exorcist, however, is not by any means the only case of possession, cursing and exorcism, even though it is admittedly the most famous case of which we are conscious. The January 28, 1974 issue of Newsweek, for instance, carries the report of Jesuit priest, Karl Patzelt, who exorcized the Evil One in Daly City, California, a devil that was attacking a young couple and their two-year-old son. Father Patzelt's curse:

I cast you out, unclean spirits, along with every satanic power of the enemy, every specter from Hell and all your fell companions.

These are timely words, as the Newsweek article says, more timely now that we are discussing the efficacy of curses. In addition to the curse, the article says: "Assisted by as many as twenty lay helpers, he performed the ancient exorcism rite 14 times in 29 days, burning incense in every room of the house and reciting prayers and chants." I point this out because I wish to make clear that (1) I am not advocating exorcism (which is a dangerous undertaking), and (2) I am more interested in the positive use of curses which brings abundance and happiness into the lives of fellow human beings. Let the exorcists exercise.

How a Young Man Cursed the Mundane and Achieved the Spectacular

Ronald Q. comes to my mind when I say it is far better to concentrate on the negativity which assails us in our daily life. Ronald is 23 years old, living with his widowed mother in Peekskill, New York, working a rather monotonous eight-to-six job, which he told me, frustrates his more talented desires. His problem was this: He was working day in and day out in a factory that produces the same household product over and over again. Granted, a young man of a different temperament might be happy in such a job, but Ronald is artistically inclined. When he came to see me, I asked him if he had any paintings showing anywhere. I saw some of his work and, while I was impressed with his artistry, his subjects left something to be desired. I felt that Ronald was not able to tap his richer reservoir of creativity because he was using so much energy in his mundane work. Ronald wanted help to get out of working in a factory so he could paint more. I wanted to help him in that, too, but more importantly, I hoped he could get in touch with his deeply hidden talent.

He said, "I'm not afraid to work. I've been working hard for the last five years. But this job is a hulking monster, an octopus that squeezes the life out of a guy. The pay is lousy for the time, effort and energy I have to put in. After work I'm too tired to do any painting. I work Saturdays, too, so that just about kills my weekends. I still get spurts of inspiration, though, and I produce a painting now and then."

His metaphor about monsters and octopuses interested me. I said, "Can you paint that?"

"What?" he queried.

"The monster, the octopus," I said. "You are a highly imaginative fellow. Why don't you visualize that obstruction to your progress and I will give you a curse to employ against it?"

Ronald caught on to the idea and returned the following week with a painting that evoked feelings of suffocation and asphyxiation in me. It was a moving piece, done in dark reds and splashes of black, something fitting to depict Dante's Inferno. Seeing the picture helped me to construct a curse worthy of the situation.

I bind you, dark and ominous powers. I bind your influence on me, on my life, on my desires. Be you cast down, weak and helpless, in the light of my creativity. Return, slimy creature, to the depths from which you have emerged.

Ronald practiced the curse diligently for weeks on end, but with very little results. I understood that he had little energy and emotion with which to charge the curse, so could only tell him to persevere and stick with it. He promised that he would, in the meantime working steadily and painting whenever he could. About three months later Ronald called to say that nothing had yet happened, but that in the course of the time he had produced five paintings, similar to the first one, which he named "Dante." He placed these paintings in a friend's store window. "Dante" sold one day to a tourist for $150. One by one, in a matter of seven days, all of his existing paintings sold.

I had to go on to Phoenix, Arizona, so I called Ronald and congratulated him. During this telephone conversation, he informed me that he had quit his job, and was now painting full time. I went on to the next stop of my lecture tour and might have forgotten about Ronald because of the many needy people I must deal with, but one day about six months afterwards, I heard from him again, this time by letter. In it he expressed his joy at not having to slave over an energy-sapping machine, and pointed out that he had constructed more curses on his own and had painted the negativity he was cursing. These paintings were selling for $200 and $300 apiece! His letter closed with this interesting list:

I think you will be interested to know that since I started using curses the way you suggested, this has happened:

1. My paintings are more alive.
2. I was able to quit my frustrating job.
3. I have over $200 in my wallet at all times.
4. My savings account contains over $4000.
5. I bought five new dresses for my hard-working mother.
6. I now pay our rent.
7. My car has four brand new tires.
8. I've got a wardrobe of groovy clothes.
9. I'm enjoying myself by reading more books and attending more theater.
10. Last, but not least, a dream has come true: I actually have three girlfriends—a blonde, a brunette, and a redhead—just like in the movies!

Ronald is an example in my books of a young man liberated, emancipated from the hardships of life which come our way through no fault of ours. He represents the type of individual who has the intestinal fortitude to trust, believe, and persevere in the face of discouraging conditions. As far as he is concerned, a miracle has occurred. A miracle? Perhaps. But then, perhaps Ronald has drawn to himself only that which was his all along. Most people don't know what is rightfully theirs in life until they stop doubting, worrying and negativizing. Curse your worries; curse the conditions which keep you from receiving all that is yours; curse darkness, despair, dread, and defeat; curse the many daily entanglements that create a web of obstruction in your path to success, happiness, and life more abundant. Never curse a job, but curse the conditions that force you to stay with a job you may not like or want. Work while the curse is working. This way you work with it, give it power, lend more energy to it, just as Ronald did. And you can gain just as he gained, just as plentifully.

How to Cast Spells That Influence Others to Help You

Sometimes a man seems to have all that he needs to get ahead in life. He has a head, a heart, and two capable hands. Maybe he has a good-paying job. His bills are paid on time, he occasionally purchases new clothes, he is able to keep his automobile running smoothly. And yet, for all of that, he may feel dissatisfied, unfulfilled, stifled. He knows intuitively that there is more to life. He knows there is a golden ring somewhere, and he wants the chance to reach for it. At such a time in a man's life what he may need is a valuable friend, the support of another human being, a helping hand. Emerson said: "A friend may well be reckoned the masterpiece of nature."

He Said, "I Don't Want Charity; Just Help Me to Help Myself!"

Ken L. fits nicely into the category of those people who desire more from life. He also fits the aforementioned description of the man who is just getting along, but who wants fulfillment and satisfaction. He was in the position to which I am referring. He needed a helping hand.

Ken said, "I don't want a hand-out. I just want someone to help me to help myself."

Ken even knew who that "someone" was, his own brother-in-law, his sister's husband, a man of means and accomplishment, but also a man who Ken described as petty, selfish, and egotistic.

He said, "My brother-in-law is in a position to help me, if he weren't so self-centered. I want to go into business for myself, I'm tired of working for other people. I've got these plans for starting my own dry cleaning business, but I need some capital. My brother-in-law has plenty of money, but we aren't even on speaking terms. When I visit my sister, he acts like I'm some kind of poor relative. I don't think we've spoken ten words to each other. He doesn't even know I exist!"

Ken's problem is a common one. Many people would be happier and more successful if only they had just "a little bit of help." The problem is getting that help from seemingly dispassionate people. But the problem is not insurmountable. I told Ken that he had to cast a spell that would make his brother-in-law help him.

Ken remarked, "If I could do that, I'd have the world by the tail!"

I said, "You can do it. But first you have to stop seeing your brother-in-law's negative traits so clearly. You are focusing your attention in the wrong place."

I explained to Ken that for every negative there is a positive. The secret of "seeing" is this: if a person is predominantly negative, there is a corresponding positivity hidden in that person's subconscious mind. Human life is composed of opposites. If a man is egotistic, there is a concealed part of him which is not. If a man is hateful, there is part of him that is loving. If a man is afraid, there is a part of him that is fearless. If a man is stingy, there is a part of him that is generous. The trick is to tap the hidden, the concealed, the latent. That's how spells work: they penetrate outer circumstances and magically contact inner realities.

I strongly urged Ken to cease observing his brother-in-law's faults and to concentrate on his hidden attributes. An automobile driver needs to see the ruts and potholes in the road, but he doesn't concentrate on them; he notices them and expertly avoids them. He looks for the "good road." Used correctly, this kind of vision can bring you success and happiness, because it enables you to see the silver lining in every cloud. And spells properly cast can penetrate the cloud and make the silver lining available to you. Here is the "Spell of Binding Friendship" that I prepared for Ken:

Hello, Friend, hidden and secret.
 Why not help me?
 Don't conceal your generosity.
 Share it with me.
 I know you want to help others.
 Help me now.

I explained to Ken that if he wanted the spell to work effectively, he would have to do something he had never done. I learned, for instance, that he had never visited his brother-in-law's place of business.

I said, "Then visit him. Here's what I suggest you do. Go to see your brother-in-law where he works, take an active interest in his business, talk with him about anything and everything, but at the same time, mentally recite your spell in his presence. In other words, talk to his subconscious mind. Try this for a week or so and then let me know what happens."

Ken returned just four days later, looking like the cat that ate the canary. He was highly excited and exuberant.

He said, "It happened yesterday! I was over at my brother-in-law's office, just chewing the fat with him, looking over a new line of shoelaces his company is manufacturing, and all of a sudden, he asks, 'Didn't I hear you say something about going into the dry cleaning business?' I kept repeating the spell in my head, looking right at him, and I said nonchalantly, 'Yes, but I don't have the capital yet.' I was mentally reciting the spell for about the fourth time when he looked up from his samples, and said, 'Just how much capital do you need to start something like that?' And before I knew it, we were absorbed in the business of dry cleaning. Then he invited me out for a drink and lunch. It was over a big, juicy steak that he said, 'Maybe I could put up the capital, if you'd let me.' If I'd let him! Ha! We discussed the details briefly over lunch and he invited me to his house for dinner. My sister looked absolutely perplexed as she heard her husband offering me all sorts of money. And the more he offered, the more I mentalized that spell."

Ken and his brother-in-law are friends today, as well as partners in a growing chain of dry cleaning establishments. Ken writes that the business is very profitable. His last letter said, "We've got 50 employees now and I've given more responsibility to a young man who wants to manage the stores for me. Now I have lots of spare time, so I'm having a nifty little cabin built for me in Vermont, where I plan to do some heavy fishing and lazing. The parcel of land cost $10,000. I don't suppose it will surprise you to learn that my brother-in-law put up $5000 of it! He and my sister are going to use the cabin for summer vacations. So everything is working out really great. Thanks for your guidance and instruction."

The Secret of Successful Spell Casting

The subconscious mind of the human being is susceptible to influence on the psychic plane. This fact was known to mystics, witches, warlocks, and sorcerers. It was by using this truth that they achieved what they wanted to achieve, gained what they desired, and made others help them to realize their wishes. Today, the same principle still works, for principles have never changed, not in ten thousand years. The principle that underlies the making of fire by rubbing two sticks together is the same principle underlying the appearance of flame when you strike a match today. When the practicing witch of three hundred years ago made the local peasants clear her land, plow the fields, plant the crops, and harvest the goods, she was employing the same principle Ken employed when he silently and mentally spoke directly to his brother-in-law's unconscious generosity and ability to help. By the use of spells you can penetrate unfriendliness, animosity, negativity, and draw upon companionship, amiability, concrete aid.

The Spell That Elicits Aid from Employers

When the Black Magician of old wanted to "draw down" cosmic energy for his own use, he uttered a spell which made himself a fitting receptacle for that power. The same principle applies in this spell for making employers like you, help you, and contribute to your well-being:

I cast from me those vibrations that interfere with my progress. I bind to me those vibrations that can raise me up. I am the best, the hardest working, the most dedicated. Those for whom I labor are blessed with material gains and they will share those gains with me.

The Spell That Attracts Investors

Witches and warlocks often sought employment for only one reason: so that they would be in close proximity to people of wealth. A witch had but to see a person of substance and she could then cast a spell which made that person her benefactor and supporter. There are many rich people around us today and the mere fact of seeing one—in person, on television, in a newspaper or magazine—can set up some powerful money-attracting vibrations. We are often inspired to greater efforts after hearing a "success story." This is because our brains respond to successful vibrations. Many modern men and women have used this spell to attract needed money:

As the magnet is to iron, I am to money. You (whoever this "you" may be) have great wealth and I now draw a portion of it to me. In return I will be your friend, share what I know with you, provide you with companionship. Share now your substance with me and I will share with you.

Steven L. of the Bronx, New York, used this spell for months and became the secretary and companion to a multimillionaire. Steve earns $2000 a month for writing letters for the aging man and for reading books to him. Steve wrote: "It's the first time in my life that I've ever been paid $100 for reading to someone! That's about what I earn per day now!"

The Spell That Draws the Assistance of Others to You

When I met Peter A., he was broke, jobless, and depressed. He started practicing the casting of spells, first to get himself on his feet, then to better his life situation. For almost a year before he came to me, Peter was living in a small squalid room in a boarding house, friendless and alone. In three months time all of that changed for the better. People began to notice him, seek his help and advice, invite him to parties and outings, and generally solicited his presence. Girls now admire him, he has a well-paying job, and a glamorous new apartment, which he calls his "swinging pad." This is the spell Peter is casting now:

I am dynamic, good-looking, personable. People see me and feel drawn to me. They want my company, desire my presence at their gatherings, and they want to aid me, help me, assist me. Wherever I go, whoever I meet, I am liked, attractive, and pleasing.

Why Some People Cannot Cast Spells and Better Their Lives

Barbara O. of Butte, Montana, said to me: "The evil and negativity in this world is all too real. Casting spells isn't going to change that. How can I cope with a husband who hardly knows I'm alive? There's never enough money to make ends meet. We've had nothing but trouble and difficulty for the last two years. And things are getting worse! Look at the economic situation in this country.

How is a person supposed to enjoy life when there's nothing but depression and misery all around?"

I said, "You have created an attitude of negativism in your thoughts. You speak negatively, you focus on the negative, the feelings of negativity plague you. Recognize this and change your pattern of thought and speech. You cannot cast an effective spell if your heart and mind are filled with doubt and defeat before you even start."

The power behind spells is available to any person, young or old, rich or poor, religious or atheistic. Anyone can learn to use the laws of spell casting, but only if he is equipped. Can a car travel at the speed of 100 miles an hour? "Of course!" you may say. But it can't if its pistons are rusted, if its points and plugs are worn, if its tires are bald, if its engine is deteriorated. In short, your vehicle—your body, mind, and spirit—have to be in tune with cosmic agencies before you can expect spells to work for you. If you have fervent desires and powerful wishes and the emotional capacity to back up spells with vigor and electric psychic energy, then spells can work for you.

Doubting Thomases Don't Reap Riches: They Raise Doubts

The meeting I held in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania was one of those joyous occasions that make this occupation rewarding. Phil U. got up and related how he had cast a spell and obtained the financial aid of his employer. Ed M. shared with us his happy circumstance of receiving a gift check from a benefactor to the tune of $2,500. Linda A. smilingly told how spells had helped her and her two children after her husband died in an auto crash. It was at this time that an older man stood up in the audience and quite rudely interrupted the meeting to launch a tirade against casting spells. I never learned the man's name. I simply rose to my feet and told my friends to keep calm and let the man have his say. We all listened politely as the man railed and ranted about negativity, sin, evil, death, and so on. He loudly informed us that there is no such thing as magic, that magic died in the Middle Ages. I listened to him for about 15 minutes, then I interrupted him.

I said, "Hold on just a minute, if you please. You have much to say against people using their own inner resources. You emote quite strongly against spell casting. Let me ask you one question: have you ever tried casting a spell yourself?"

"No!" he bellowed.

With that, I abruptly showed him out. I was not being rude. We had listened to his views. But I have little patience with negative people who have never tried tapping the mysterious forces of the universe and yet are so quick to denounce others for doing so.

The man's presence by no means ruined the meeting. If anything he had enhanced it, providing us with a perfect example of the Doubting Thomas who will never achieve, never succeed, and never grasp the realities of abundant living. In the end I said, "There goes a good example of powerful emotion. Now if he could learn to put all that energy to positive use, he'd be a millionaire!"

The Spell That Can Give You Power Over Others

Michael H. came to me in Los Angeles with a story that astounded me. He was 24 years old, the son of a man who had apparently been doing business with gangster types for years. Michael's request was this: "I don't want to follow in my father's footsteps. I don't want anything to do with his business associate, Mr. G. Mr. G is a crook, a liar, a cheat, and a chiseler. But I want his money. I want it because most of it was stolen from my father. Can you give me a spell against a man like this?"

I could and I did, but only after researching his story and verifying his claims. The Power Spell I gave him is not to be used lightly, for it conjures up forces which could frighten a man to death were they seen.

The Power Spell should be used only in cases where you are dealing with highly negative individuals, preferably with people who have harmed other human beings. It should not be used against strangers or innocent bystanders.

In the Middle Ages the magician's prime interest was personal power, one minute afflicting an enemy with boils, and the next minute raising a corpse from a grave. Aleister Crowley is said to have been able to turn people into animals by using the Power Spell. I will not give the words he used here. My aim is to supply a comparable spell designed to give you power over others, not annihilate them.

The textbooks of magicians are called grimoires, and the one called Lemegeton provides the following conjuring spell:

I conjure thee, O Spirit N., by Him who spake and it was done by the Most Holy and Glorious Names Adonai, El, Elohim, Elohe, Zebaoth, Elion, Esherce, Jah, Tetragrammaton, Sadai. Appear forthwith and show thyself to me, here and now, without delay. Come, fulfill my desires and persist unto the end in accordance with my will.

This spell, and others like it, were used in the days when men believed the center of the universe and the power of All lay beyond the physical realm, outside the habitat of humanity. Thousands of years of evolution have shown us, however, that the center of the universe is man—you. Thus you will not cast a spell to evoke demons, sun gods, or nature spirits, but to elicit the aid and support of a fellow human being. Using the above ancient formula as an example, I gave Michael this spell:

I conjure thee, O Spirit of G., (use the last initial of the person being spellbound), by the universal forces of the cosmos, by magnetism, electricity, gravity, genetic codes, biorhythm. Respond forthwith and share thy wealth, here and now, without delay. Come, fulfill my desires and persist unto the end in accordance with my will.

What your will is depends strictly on you. In Michael's case, his will was that Mr. G. would give money to him, plenty of it, continually and without ceasing until Michael himself said stop. Michael practiced this spell nightly for two months' time, three times in succession on the nights of the full moon. After that length of time he called me.

He said, "So much has happened since you left that I don't know where to begin. Mr. G. visited our home and asked me to come see him. I did. When I arrived at the plush offices downtown he tried to get me interested in some shady operations. I declined the invitation. Then he said he respected me for my principles and convictions. I had never heard him speak like this before. But more was to come. I couldn't believe my ears. He said he was old and tired, weary of dodging the police and the authorities. He asked me if I had any ideas about how he might invest his money so he could get out of the rackets. I quickly said yes, he could invest in me! And he did!"

What Michael meant is this: Mr. G. severed his relationships with criminal types and activities and backed Michael in whatever endeavors he undertook. At the time of this writing, Mr. G. is dead. He died of a heart attack. But Michael is another story, a success story, as they say. By using the Power Spell diligently he was raised from dim obscurity to fame and fortune. He owns a huge restaurant and bar in Los Angeles. He stars in movies which are produced by his own studio. Models and actresses flock around him always. His home is a sprawling ranch near Palm Springs. And now he is cutting records and buying stock in the record company. In short, Michael's whole life has changed completely. To see him in a $200 suit makes it difficult indeed to believe this is the same downtrodden young man who came to see me less than one year ago.

Casting Spells Can Make All People Your Benefactors

Suppose you want a helping hand, increased possessions, money, fame, fortune. Then turn to the infinite power of the universe, tap the source of potent energy through the use of power spells. Use any of the spells which fill this chapter, or make up some of your own, and you can make people turn to you, notice you, come to your aid and support.

Know that the cosmic forces which ancient mystics and magicians tapped with spells can also be contacted by you whenever you utter these emotion-charged spells. Don't be afraid to want, to need, to desire. You can have anything you wish for if you will set up the proper cosmic patterns of cause and effect through the application of power spells.

Spells work. How they work is up to you.

chapter 8

How to Pray Prayers That Turn Poverty into Riches

A sympathetic friend advised Heather L. to attend my lectures. She did—for eight consecutive weeks. My lectures always close with an informal get-together, but Heather never approached me with a question, a suggestion, or even an answer. She kept to herself—until the end of the series. Then she came to me and made her presence known in no uncertain terms. She was frank and matter of fact, straight to the point and concise.

She said, "I'm 22 years old and I've already been married and divorced. After two years of drudgery I grew tired of slaving for a guy who didn't appreciate me. And the life was lousy. I've got a crummy little job in an office right now; I live with my mother, and I'm about to burst. I need concrete help. A friend of mine told me to come and listen to your lectures. I have. You say a person can get answers to her prayers. Okay, my request is simple: I want a $250-a-month apartment in New York City, a career job, fantastic dresses, skirts, and sweaters, and all the nice things that go underneath, and a real man who knows how to treat a woman. Can you get me all that?"

Just as forthrightly, I said, "I can't get you anything. But you can get anything you want if you can put power prayer to work for yourself. You certainly seem to have the requisite spirit. Do you pray?"

"Not since I was 12," Heather replied.

"Do you know any prayers?" I asked.

"Sure," she said, "but after hearing your lectures I don't think any of them will do."

"What prayers do you pray, or did you pray?" I pressed.

"Prayers like this: 'Please, God, help this poor miserable sinner and I promise to be your servant for the rest of my life.'" My mother taught me that one. And her mother taught it to her."

"I see what you mean," I said. "And you are right. Prayers like that won't do at all. You need prayers that take a firm hold on the promises of God, that activate cosmic energy and put it to work for you."

I explained to Heather that we all need to pray prayers that open us up to universal principles of action and creativity. Sorrowful prayers are negative prayers, hardly fit to be uttered by "sons of God."

How Power Prayers Make You a Channel for Cosmic Energy

If we try turning on a light and it doesn't work, we look to the bulb, the fixture, or the switch. We don't despair and pray, "O, electricity, please enter the bulb and make light!" Though the mysterious power called electricity surrounds us, we know that only the amount that enters the bulb will make light for us.

The same principle is true of the cosmic energy of the universe. It permeates all of matter and antimatter, but only the amount that flows through us will help us. And creative energy cannot flow through if the bulb is burned out or malfunctioning, if our own being is not receptive. Prayer makes you receptive, open, a channel. Not petitioning or supplicating prayers, but affirming prayers, strong prayers, power prayers.

A Power Prayer That Turns Lack into Plenty

I gave Heather the following prayer, designed first to make her subconscious mind receptive to the flow of psychic energy and second to fulfill her need for a prayer that commands response:

Wind of the west, hear my prayer.
 Wind of the east, hear my voice.
 Wind of the south, lift up my plea.
 Wind of the north, carry my command.
 Sweep, O winds, course through space,
 Carry my prayer to the very heart of all that is.
 I open my heart, expand my awareness, free my senses for reception.
 I pray against barriers to my happiness.
 I pray for the joy which is mine by right.
 I pray against limitation and lack.
 I pray for strength, health, success, and wealth.
 Hear, O winds, the command of my prayer, and visit upon me all that I desire.

Heather made a habit of reciting this power prayer daily, sometimes aloud, sometimes to herself, but always imbuing it with fervent emotion and the powerful vibrations of real need, strong desire, and expectant anticipation.

I waited expectantly myself, eager to hear from this brash young woman again, to see how she was faring. Days went by, then weeks, and then months. I all but forgot about Heather L. Then one day when I was in Nebraska I received a special delivery letter post-marked Daytona Beach, Florida, and it was from Heather. The contents tickled me so much that I laughed until tears came to my eyes. Here is what she wrote:

Dear Mr. Laurence:

I just had to write to you to let you know that your power prayer doesn't work. I told you I wanted an expensive apartment in New York City, a career job, fantastic clothes, and a real man to love me. And what did I get? A beach house in Florida, 12 bikinis, a modeling position with an advertising agency, and four different men of varying talents. So I stopped praying the prayer you gave me—(I wouldn't want anything to spoil this dream!).

All my love,

Heather

This is a good time for me to add: you don't always get what you pray for. Sometimes you get more than you expected!

Prayers That Work for Others Can Work for You

Phillips Brooks said: "A prayer, in its simplest definition, is merely a wish turned heavenward." And where is heaven? Up in the sky? After death? Not hardly! Jesus said the kingdom of heaven is within. If you can believe that heart, soul, and mind, you will know that "heaven" is the all-encompassing, unlimited, boundless sea called the subconscious. Knowing that, you can translate Brooks' statement to read: "A prayer is a wish turned to the subconscious mind." This psychological translation is merely another way of saying "the kingdom of heaven is within." And this modern knowledge puts you in a position to contact that vast sea of wisdom, power, and creativity, just as the saints of old did without knowing what it was they were doing. Even without knowing, they knew that prayer works!

Seventeenth Century divines kept large journals and biographies of instances of successful prayer expressly to document the efficacy of prayer. The overwhelming majority of clerical writers and religious laymen believed beyond a doubt that there is a definite link between the way a man prays and his material fortune.

On the other hand, many saints and pious men and women prayed mostly for spiritual gifts, peace, grace, moral strength, and God's love. They, too, got what they prayed for, which just goes to prove that prayers are answered, whether you call the answerer God, Energy, Spirit, Cosmos, Universe, or Law. The same will, feeling, and spirit that infused prayers for spiritual gifts can infuse prayers for material gifts. If the truth were known it would be obvious to the diligent researcher that the saints and hermits who did without material possessions, did without by choice, not because God wanted it that way. Matthew 7:11 says: "How much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him." Pray accordingly and nothing you desire will be denied you.

How a Young Man Turned a Spiritual Gift into Material Wealth

George T., 25 years old, is a Sunday school teacher in Peoria, Illinois. He teaches free of charge, devotes his time and energy to the religious school as "an offering to God," as he told me. When I met George he was afraid to pray power prayers, accustomed as he was to supplicating and begging prayers. I read him the aforementioned quote from Matthew, and we discussed how a good and gracious God would not wish his children to suffer poverty for His sake. George started reciting standard prayers, but with a slight change: he charged them with emotion, expectancy, and power. He opened himself to the forces of heaven (the power of the subconscious mind) and prayed prayers for material benefits. He did so only when I assured him that it was all right to add, "And whatsoever I receive I will share with your church." We had no idea in what manner George's prayers would be answered. He declined to name desired possessions, to air specific wishes. So his prayer was:

O Lord Jehovah, give unto me this day all that thou wish to be mine. I am open to thy power and sincerely desire your blessings. And whatsoever I receive I will share with your church.

Because George genuinely liked his weekend job of Sunday school teaching, he often put a spiritual gift to work for the children.

He had an uncanny grasp of the Scriptures and liked to create short stories for the children to read. One day he was approached by a visitor from the Mother Church, who praised him for his creativity, and requested a sampling of his writings. One thing led to another and today George is earning $30, $40, and $50 per story, which appear regularly in the church's official magazine. This is a case where an individual turned poverty into riches without even trying!

How Praying Plugs You into Infinite Power

Your subconscious mind is a storehouse of invisible wisdom, power, and intelligence, qualities just waiting to be activated by prayers prayed with intense emotion, feeling and desire. You can tap this source of primal power through the simple but miraculous avenue of prayer. If you are a bulb burned out, prayer can rejuvenate you, and once re-animated you can channel the timeless, ageless and eternal psychic energy which actually surrounds you even as you read this. The room in which you sit is charged with potent energy which you can draw down for your own use. You can thus transform lack into plenty, changing poverty into richness, deprivation into wealth, an empty wallet into a fat bank account. "With God all things are possible" is not a vain platitude, but a dynamic statement of faith, belief and power. It means that your subconscious mind can and will provide you with whatever you want—if you will get in touch with it. And the way to do that is through powerful and effective prayer, modern, up-to-date prayer, confident prayer, commanding prayer.

Men and Women Whose Prayers Make Dollars and Cents

When Paul O. wanted a new car, he prayed: "Bring to me now my heart's desire. I pray with my heart, my soul, my mind, with every fiber of my being."

When Charlotte V. needed money for an operation, she prayed: "O God and gods, forces and powers, I pray thee hear my voice and open unto me the way to health and peace." She got her operation.

When Stanley F. desired a new television, more clothing, and extra money, he prayed: "Gods of gold, gods of silver, fill my life with silver and gold." He received all that he wanted.

The Key to Power Prayers That Bring Riches

Remember that when you utter a prayer of power, commanding your desire, expecting it to become manifest in your life, you are obeying timeless laws and principles. Look around you. Notice the vastness of space, time, and world. Think about outer space, all the planets, stars, asteroids, and comets—millions of them. We are surrounded by Infinity. The point is this: the Cosmos does not believe in lack. Everywhere you look there is fruitfulness, plenty, richness of supply. You can share in this wonderful bounty through prayer.

How to Chant Your Way to Dominance and Supremacy

The world is made up of followers and leaders. Contrary to popular belief, we have a choice as to which we will be. There is nothing wrong with wanting to be a leader, personable, dominant, supreme. In fact, if there is any "wrong" it is when an individual believes others can have magnetic personalities but he cannot. Many people hold the self-deceiving opinion that special glamor and personality belong to the private domain of beautiful people or that the lucky few are born with sparkling personalities. Nothing can be further from the truth. Anyone who sincerely desires to have a charismatic personality can develop one. You can create a new and exciting personality for yourself and develop an attractive, magnetic, more personable you.

Chapin said: "We move too much in platoons; we march by sections; we do not live in our vital individuality enough." What sets the leader and the follower apart is the leader's self-knowledge that he can be all that he wishes to be. A leader has developed charisma.

What is charisma? Webster says it is "a special quality of leadership that captures the popular imagination and inspires unswerving allegiance and devotion."

How a Young Man Chanted and Overcame His Inferiority Complex

When I read this definition of charisma to William G. of Savoy, Massachusetts, he actually felt threatened by it.

He said, "Capture the popular imagination and inspire unswerving allegiance and devotion! Me? No way. I'm the typical weakling who gets sand kicked in his face at the beach! Nobody's going to look up to me!"

"You're right," I said, "If you go on thinking like that people will never even notice you. But if you want to stand out in a crowd, if you want to be popular, personable, magnetic, then start chanting with purpose, feeling, and determination."

I explained to William that with a few carefully chosen words in a chant to Charis, the goddess and giver of personality ("charisma" derives from Charis), he could open his higher mind to omnipresent cosmic forces that could change his whole life for the better.

He said, "But the competition is terrific. In my neighborhood alone there are lots of guys with flair, money, cars—and lots of girls. I've tried competing with them. Really, I have. It isn't like I haven't tried. But who has the steady girl? Who gets invited to the posh parties? Who walks around smiling with confidence all of the time? Not me, I hope to tell you."

In spite of William's lack of confidence in himself, I went ahead and gave him a chant, instructing him to put off trying to compete for a few weeks. I suggested that he concentrate on the chanting, letting it imbed itself in his subconscious mind, permitting it to incubate, strengthen, and grow. Here is the chant to Charis:

Charis, Charis, beautiful and generous Charis.
Clothe me in thy bounty, dress me in thy charm.

Fill me with electric personality.

Rain upon me thy gifts of captivation, fascination and enchantment.

Let thy powers flow through me, over me, and around me.

William told me a week later that he was chanting nightly in front of his bedroom mirror. He said, "The first few nights I chanted I was in my pajamas. But something happened. I swear I could feel changes in my body. I stripped naked and chanted. I taped a copy of the chant to my mirror where I can see it and I chant it over and over. It's not only soothing to my mind, it feels like I'm developing muscles. I've noticed a big change in my eyes. They seem to penetrate."

William's subconscious mind was working for him, so I told him to persevere. It is quite common for a person responding to cosmic forces and subconscious influence to develop penetrating eyes, glowing skin, and stronger stature. What was happening to William has happened to many other people who have chanted with purpose and determination.

William came back to see me about a month later, looking self-confident, assured, and quite relaxed. The latter is important, for true personality and magnetism should come with ease. You don't have to work hard at being attractive and charismatic. William was obviously chanting properly, claiming the qualities of mind and body that are rightfully his. He was no longer dwelling on the superior qualities of his competitors. He now enjoys the company of beautiful women. He attends many parties and social gatherings. And even some of the men who seemed to tower over him before are now his dedicated friends. William now laughs at his earlier doubt and inferiority complex. Those he thought to be giants next to him no longer threaten his own sense of individuality. The chant to Charis worked a miracle in his life, enabling him to see that others are no competition at all, no matter how strong, popular or handsome they may seem. The Bible says it clearly: "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." (Ecclesiastes 9:11). In other words, regardless of how esteemed another may be, you are an individual in your own right, equally capable of achieving strength, personality and popularity.

They Chanted Their Way from Insignificance to Supremacy

One of the liveliest lecture series I ever held was in Lincoln, Nebraska. The series was titled "How Chants Produce Charisma," and the group consisted of ten men and four women. Each had a different desire, each was sincere and purposive, each wanted more personality.

Marion E. wanted to attract and captivate the manager of the office in which she worked, a single man who was highly popular. Marion's problem was that the office was filled with glamorous females whom she considered more beautiful and worthy of his attention than she. Since Marion was in verbal contact with the man every day, as well as situated in the same office, I instructed her to carry on business as usual but to mentally intone this chant frequently:

Beauty, charm, grace and love. These I have, these you want. I am what you need, what you dream of, what is best for you. Turn to me for beauty, charm, grace and love.

James R. is a young executive in an aerospace corporation, recently promoted. He had been invited to attend an executive gathering, a party at which some of the most prominent members of the firm would be present, along with their elegant wives. All James wanted was to make a dynamic impression at this party, for it was well-known throughout the corporation that a man could make or break himself at one of these gatherings. I gave James this chant:

My stature reflects self-possession.
My carriage reflects stability.
My eyes reflect confidence.

My speech reflects knowledge.
I am success incarnate.

Greg A. works in a large factory on the east side of town, one employee among over 100. He wanted to be noticed, to be appreciated, to get ahead. Here is his chant:

I think like an executive.
My ideas are productive.
Given the opportunity
I can make this business flourish.
I am energetic, productive, capable, reliable, dependable, valuable.
Open the doors of opportunity
And business will sky-rocket.

Bert W. is a man of 60, a night watchman at a firm he used to work in as sales manager. After retirement, because he needed to supplement his income, he took the only job available to a man of his age: night watchman. He wanted to get back into the "swing of things," back into the lifeline of business. I gave him this chant:

I am not finished with life.
My life is still vibrant and needful.
My abilities need a channel, an open door.
Younger men may be strong, but I am wise with experience and know-how.
I am successful, competent, an asset to any company.

Gail S., a lovely young woman suffering inferiority because of a club foot, chanted this chant:

Perfection lies not in the physical, but in the spiritual.
I am as God made me.
I will not downgrade myself.
I am beautiful, graceful, magnetic.
Physical impediments cannot keep me from happiness and success.

Alex C. is a traffic policeman who wanted a promotion, better wages, more prestige, greater responsibility. He chanted:

Potential, potential, untapped potential,
It lies dormant within,
Seeking a way out.
Opportunity, opportunity, elusive opportunity,
Appear for me now.

Of the 14 clients, these six dedicated themselves to power chanting, persevering, and applying their innate psychic force. Of the group, the six excelled, five achieved a portion of their wishes, and the remaining three failed miserably. One woman told me she couldn't chant every day. A man said he was too busy to stop important business just to chant. Another man didn't believe the chant was working—after trying it twice!

If I have reported the success cases I have done so for a good reason. Success stories have their place in our minds; they should inspire you to greater efforts, greater victories. The six clients I have mentioned chanted with fervor, desire, concentration, and with the will to achieve. Their successes are awe-inspiring.

Marion E. is now Mrs. Walter W., the wife of the office manager whose heart she wanted to win, the man who hardly noticed her before alongside "more beautiful" women.

James R., the young executive, in addition to his career occupation, is now the chairman of all social functions for the firm. For this secondary job he receives an additional $500 a month, bringing his salary up to $33,000 per year.

Greg A. ascended from obscurity to prominence. He moved from the position of factory laborer to assistant foreman to part-time foreman to full-time foreman to section chief—in just seven months. He is still chanting.

Bert W., who chanted to find a better job, experienced a miracle. The president of the company at which he had worked for over 25 years became aware that in this night watchman was a wealth of experience and expertise. The president reinstated Bert as the sales manager at a salary of $25,000 per year.

Gail S. is a bathing suit model! A man approached her on the beach one day and commented on her extraordinary beauty. Her club foot? Well, the man, a highly paid photographer, simply photographs Gail from the ankles upward! And Gail is a true success.

Alex C. moved away from Lincoln. He now operates his own private detective agency in Virginia. He accepts clients only by recommendation and most are wealthy. His basic fee is $2000.

How and Why Chants Create Miracles

The foregoing cases have one thing in common: people who knew what they wanted and weren't afraid to follow through with fortitude. Some of the other clients, as I said, failed miserably. They did not follow through. Henry Ward Beecher said: "Many men build as cathedrals were built, the part nearest the ground finished; but that part which soars toward heaven, the turrets and the spires, forever incomplete."

Marion, James, Greg, Bert, Gail, Alex—these individuals soared straight to "heaven," the power and boundless energy of the subconscious mind. They finished their "turrets" and "spires." These lusty Nebraskans persevered, chanted with dedication, believing, trusting in the power within to change everything. And today they are living wholesome, happy, exciting lives. They have found "the hidden treasure" which is inside, not outside, a wealth of power and ability that they didn't know existed before they started chanting with purpose. As Swift said, "It is in men as in soils where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of."

How Chants Produce the Power of Subliminal Advertising

Inherent in the successes of these proud people is this: in chanting they affected not only their own inner resources, but cogently influenced people around them. This is how chants can work for you, for they set up ripples of psychic influence that affects others subliminally. To affect another subliminally is to influence them in secret, invisibly, without their conscious awareness of what you are doing. Marion conducted business as usual, but she transmitted her message to the man she wanted secretly, invisibly, subliminally. The others did the same. Chanting is a mental and spiritual operation. When you chant you broadcast higher-than-sound waves. People around you begin to feel your presence, your strong and powerful emanations.

Chants work because they make your brain and mind potent carriers of subliminal messages. An example of how subliminal advertising works is that of television. Not long ago it was banned, and rightly so. Advertisers started flashing short messages on television screens, during the course of programs, just short, pithy sayings, which nonetheless had powerful effect because they were subliminal. No one spoke these messages; they just appeared for a few seconds and then disappeared. If you were watching a movie or a quiz program, you wouldn't consciously notice the advertisement, but your unconscious mind did! Implanted subliminally in the mind, these ads could make a person go out and buy the product—a very dangerous situation when you think about it. Fortunately, this illegal activity was brought to an abrupt halt, sparing us the agonies of mind-control. Subliminal broadcasting is dynamic. Used positively, it can carry your messages to others through power chants.

How Chanting Reverses the Power of the Evil Eye

One of the most obvious developments in people who have successfully used power chants is their ability to influence others with their eyes.

In the days of old, witches and magicians used the "Evil Eye," meaning that they were able to cast a negative spell over anyone simply by looking at them. Some kind of magical power seemed to emanate from their eyes and whoever they cursed would experience illness, setbacks, poverty, or even death.

Today we know through the good auspices of modern science that electrical energy actually travels from eye to eye or from eye to mind. Chanting, which puts you in touch with hidden psychic forces, makes it possible for you to send a message with your eyes, to effect the thinking of others by transferring your desires to them via your eyes. The "Evil Eye" is a real and dangerous fact. Chanting reverses the operation, makes it possible for you to contact others without their knowing, makes it possible for you to use the principle of the "Evil Eye" in a positive way. By looking at someone in silence and by chanting mentally while you are looking with fixed gaze, you can make others help you. This is why chanting works in creating new, vibrant, more personable, attractive, magnetic, dynamic, charismatic personalities.

Remember this: chants are invisible, unheard electrical waves in the atmosphere. Chants transfer from the chanter to the receiver—and all human brains are receivers. To dominate is to chant with dominance; to excel is to chant excellence; to receive help is to chant power; to influence others is to chant subliminally. Chanting is mental communication, but more, it is a method of channeling higher than personal powers and directing those forces to others to make others docile, helpful, likable, and conducive to supporting you.

Curses That Subdue Enemies, Bullies, and Oppressors

During a year of counseling alienated youth in Los Angeles, I came to know two brothers, Stephen and Arnold P. Both boys were still in their teens, Stephen 17, Arnold 19. Both had the same problem: feelings of bitterness and hatred against whites. But their similarity ended there, because each had a different idea about how to go about dealing with the problem. Stephen, for example, wanted me to provide him with curses that would harm, hinder, and generally create havoc. Arnold, on the other hand, requested curses which would enable him to better himself, thwart obnoxious individuals, and overcome opposition. I could not help the first boy to perpetuate ill feelings, animosity, and danger. I could help Arnold. His attitude was healthy.

I gave Arnold three curses to use: one to alleviate the pressures of his environment; one to increase his self-esteem; and a third to combat persecution.

A Curse Against Environmental Pressures

Cursed be the dark and binding influences of this city which prevent a man from bettering himself. May they dissolve, dissipate, vanish. I walk amongst them now with complete immunity, reacting only to positive suggestions from others and from myself.

A Curse for Increasing Your Self-Esteem

I strongly curse the idea that men are unequal. I and my brother are one, no matter our color, creed or religion. I curse racism and love all men. I curse bigotry and respect all people. I am a man under God and no man shall rob me of my birthright.

A Curse Against Persecution

Cursed be persecution; forgiven be the persecutor. May man's inhumanity to man cease this day. May we all live in peace and harmony. Cursed be persecution, favoritism, oppression.

Arnold practiced these curses daily for three weeks before he came to see me again, and then it was to inform me that they were already creating changes in his life.

He said, "When I walk down the street now, I don't feel that heavy pressure that I used to. Now it doesn't matter to me whether there are discriminating bigots around me or not. I proceed with my business, confident that I know where I'm going. I'm going to keep saying these curses because I feel like a human being for the first time in my life—an equal human being."

Arnold kept good his word. And the curses helped him considerably, even against tremendous odds. Today he lives in Greenfield, Massachusetts. He got away from the depressing environment of the neighborhood in which he grew up. He lives in a place where any man—black, white, yellow, or green—is accepted according to his worth and behavior. There is an unwritten New England code that says: We don't care who or what you are. Prove yourself and you're welcome. Arnold is now an upstanding citizen of his community, the owner of a small business—and he has no trouble with neighborhood pressures, discrimination, or persecution.

I regret to report that his brother Stephen is in a California prison, convicted of transporting arms across state lines. The positive note is this: Stephen obtained my address from his brother and wrote to me. He wrote: "I can see now that my brother was right. I guess it's too late for me now; I'll be in here for years. But maybe you could find the time to send me some information, some things I can do in here to change my life so that when I get out I can be free, really free." I send Stephen tapes of my lectures.

How Curses Cut a Path Through Obstacles and Setbacks

Verbalized or mentalized, curses impart dynamic energy waves that cut through negativism like a knife cuts through butter. Charged with emotion, impelled by psychic energy, emanating from the subconscious, curses can dwarf seemingly insurmountable obstacles and set you free to accomplish whatever you wish. Carefully worded curses can "clear your field" of obnoxious people, interference, setbacks, hindrance. Curses can ward off physical and psychic attack, making it possible for you to soar to heights of power, peace, and prosperity.

Sometimes we seem to be in a position to get ahead, to get what we want from life, but somehow, usually due to "circumstances beyond our control" or due to "Fate" or due to "the way the cards fell," we fail to achieve our goals. Some nebulous "something" stands in our way—tradition, habit, popular belief, negativity, unfeeling neighbors, unkind co-workers, envious acquaintances. This is where potent power curses come in handy. Curses banish difficulties and opposition. They do so because, depending upon the wording, they either bypass the obstacles altogether and let you through, or they enable you to progress in spite of obstruction.

Curses for Developing the Power of Mental Karate

Mental karate is a concept I use in my lectures when dealing with persecution, bigotry, oppression and enmity. Many people come up against some kind of negative behavior in others from time to time, people who want to do something effective about it without resorting to physical violence, which only creates karma. In the case of Stephen P., whom I mentioned previously, I could not help him because he was directing his emotion and psychic energy against all people. In other words, if I had given him power curses he would have used them against innocent as well as guilty parties. I was able to help his brother Arnold because this lad could be trusted to employ curses against guilty and obviously destructive individuals only. You have to be as careful with the use of curses as with the use of karate. Even more so in that you are dealing blows not just to sections of the physical body but to the entire organism, physical, mental and spiritual.

Curses can become as effective as karate chops to the throat, as deadly as lightning fast kicks to the groin. Armed with this knowledge you can subdue any enemy, confound any bully, and completely overcome any oppressor. In short, all opposition becomes powerless against you when you develop the art of mental karate through the use of curses.

Imagine a karate expert in action right now. Picture him mentally. He moves with the swiftness of a snake. His hardened hands slice, cut through the air, deliver terrific blows to his opponent. He raises a foot, kicks, and his foe goes sprawling. This imagery will help you to visualize the powerful effects of the following curses for developing mental karate:

The Curse That Makes Mincemeat of Bullies

This curse is effective against an opponent whether you are near him or far away from him. However, it is most effective when you are eye to eye with the enemy, or at least in the same room with him. Just mentalize with emotional propulsion:

You haven't the willpower to strike out at me. Your energy is leaking from your brain, seeping from your body, spilling into the air. Swear, growl, rant, and rave, but you cannot hurt me. You are weak, helpless, impotent. You assault people because inwardly you are a sniveling coward. Weakness, infirmity, debility—these I curse you with.

There isn't a man alive—strongman, hero, or star—who can long endure the psychic pressure of this power curse repeated in his presence often and with feeling.

Ted A. of Brattleboro, Vermont, used it against a man twice his size, a man who accosted him in a bar and tried to provoke a fist fight with him. Ted calmly held his ground, stared the giant in the eyes, and mentally transmitted the curse that makes mincemeat of bullies. His antagonist swallowed nervously, looked around at the fearful audience that had gathered, and stormed out of the bar muttering to himself.

How to Curse Enemies and Still Be a Good Guy

Harold H. of Canton, Ohio, was always known as a "good guy." The father of two children, husband to a lovely wife, friend to one and all, Harold struck most people as the happy-go-lucky type. But all of us at one time or another come up against enemies. So did Harold. He didn't make the enemy. The man was a co-worker, a petty, mean individual, jealous of Harold's popularity. The man constantly lied and spread rumors at the company where he and Harold worked, in hopes of undermining Harold and perhaps taking over his job. Harold, being a nice person, put up with this unfairness for months before he came to see me.

I said, "There is no reason for you to put up with that sort of persecution. I can understand that you haven't wanted to hurt him back, to fight fire with fire, but at the same time, you needn't submit to this unjust and childish opposition."

I understood Harold to be a fair person, a gentle person, so I gave him this curse which leaves the karate chops to karma:

I bless you as a fellow human but I curse all your negative actions against me. All that you do, you do not to me, but to yourself, for I do not deserve your animosity. Therefore, it backfires, reverberates, returns to you.

I fully expected to hear from Harold that the curse worked and that his enemy was subdued. I have seen enough of these curses in action to know that they are infallible if you concentrate on your objective and give them thrust. Well, Harold's curse worked even better than I expected.

He said, "I thought it was wonderful when Bob stopped trying to undercut me, but it was fantastic when he completely reversed his behavior. I can't believe it, but he's actually friendly toward me! He's helpful, considerate, polite, human. It's a miracle, I tell you!"

The last I heard, Harold's "enemy" had become his brother-in-law. He and Harold are planning to go into business together, working hand in hand toward a common goal. Mental karate works!

How to Subdue an Army of Enemies with a Single Curse

Eric T. came to me in a state of agitation and worry. His sister had recommended my lectures as a "spiritual uplifting" and he attended some I held in Salt Lake City, Utah. But when I had heard Eric's story I knew he needed something a little more substantial than spiritual guidance. He needed mental karate.

He said, "I've been working for the same firm for almost six years. It's a small, tight-knit company, not much chance for advancement, but I like it. But I can't get ahead. Not because of the lack of opportunity, but because of this small group of men I call the clique. The office manager and the plant foreman are brothers. The stockroom foreman is their friend. So is the sales manager. This band of men all but runs the outfit. They block everyone from rising in the firm. They keep everything sewed up. You can't get past them no matter how hard you work, no matter how hard you try to elevate yourself. I've seen them deliberately falsify records of employees they didn't want around. The president is an aging man, a victim of two heart attacks. He doesn't come around much any more due to his poor health, and I don't think he's aware of the way these men are running his company. I also think they are stealing company funds. How can I combat them?"

I said, "Combat is right! You're up against powerful negativity here. This group of men, whether they know it or not, are channeling potent negative energy. But you don't have to go on being the underdog. You don't have to fear them, cower to them, inform on them, or waste your precious energy dreading their powers."

I gave Eric this curse:

I curse the negative power which flows through you.
Cursed be the oppression you channel.
I curse the unfairness that turns your heart to stone.
Cursed be the unhappiness you transmit.

I didn't know exactly how Eric would use the curse. Of course, I instructed him to imbue it with forceful energy, powerful emotion, and true desire, but the precise way he would do so was unknown to me. Eric had to tell me how he used this karate blow. And he did, just two weeks later. He had been even more forceful than I had anticipated.

He said, "I practiced the curse for seven days, day and night, until I had it memorized. During working hours I intoned it mentally, directing it at the clique. And when I felt ready, when I felt I had the moral stamina to carry through with it, I went to each of the men. I went into Mr. B.'s office and said the curse right to his face. Without another word, I turned away, and went to his brother's office. I shot the curse at him. Then I did the same with the plant foreman and the stock room foreman. Five days ago the plant foreman quit. The stockroom foreman came to me and asked me if I was going to tell the president that he had been stealing some of the company equipment. I hadn't even known about that! But for some reason, he thought I did. Three days ago Mr. B. sent for me. I expected to be fired. He certainly could get away with it. But he didn't fire me. He looked worried, tired, and nervous. He apologized for mistreating me over the years. He wanted to know if I would be interested in taking over the plant foreman's job. I accepted it. Two days ago, his brother stopped me on the way to lunch. He took me aside and, in a whisper, asked me how much of a cut I was after. I knew what he meant, but I was still surprised that he thought I was some kind of an extortionist. I told him I didn't want any money, particularly not stolen funds. He looked frightened when I said that. I'm still using the curse mentally, because now that I see it works, even in mysterious ways, I want to see if I can't do something constructive to help the president."

Eric's good intentions materialized. Remember that Eric never once told anyone what he knew about these negative individuals. But the president of the company learned of their misdeeds somehow. Eric informs me that the president made a surprise visit, took his old office over, had Mr. B. arrested, fired his brother and the stockroom foreman. Eric is now the general manager of the whole company.

I can only conclude that Eric's rapid-fire use of the power curse makes him a black belt karate expert.

How to Use Curses to Achieve Success, Power, and Freedom

Nothing can stand in the way of the persistent individual who utilizes the cosmic forces invoked by power curses. Regardless of what may be blocking your progress—enemy, bully, or oppressor—you can overcome through the use of inspired, heartfelt, mind-powered curses. Once you successfully remove interference and impediment you are free to soar to heights of success and happiness. Properly used, properly infused curses against enmity and negative circumstances act like the axes that were once used to cut loose great air-filled balloons. They sever binding ropes, imbedded spikes, confining ties, and let you rise like the balloon. When your obstacles and setbacks are overcome you automatically elevate and then nothing can hold you down.

How to Cast Spells That Bind the Will of Others and Make You Strong

There is a principle of oscillating rhythm in the cosmos, a universal rhythm which regulates growth and decay, power and impotence, summer and winter, joy and gladness, birth and death. Human beings also respond to this regulating cosmic influence, which explains why we sometimes feel like we are "on top of the world," and sometimes "down in the dumps." An understanding of this principle can help you to comprehend why it is necessary for human beings to be all things to all people: sometimes humble, sometimes strong; now polite, now forceful; sometimes agreeable, sometimes overbearing; now obedient, now pioneering. Most people are not consciously aware of these fluctuating behaviorisms, but there are times when circumstances, conditions, or people make us suddenly aware that a different kind of behavior from us is called for. If a man comes up to you on the street, for instance, and grabs you by the shirt front, you don't smile and say, "Hello." A different kind of action is called for. Again, if a man comes up to you and greets you warmly, you don't double your fist in anger. These are simple examples, but they point up what I mean when I tell my clients to be aware of what particular circumstances require. There is a time for being friendly towards people, and there is a time for being mentally aggressive towards them, depending on the people you are dealing with. The Bible says:

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven; a time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted; a time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up. (Ecclesiastes 3:1-4.)

When is the time "to pluck up that which is planted" when what you planted was love, peace, and friendship? When is the time to "break down" when what you built was bonds of brotherhood?

He Asked for Help But Got a Threat

Gary K. of Akron, Ohio, is the father of four children and the husband to a paraplegic wife. Jobless, hounded by bill collectors, desperate for work, he took the only job available to him on short notice. He became a cabdriver. Let me say right here that cabdriving is not the job for a man with so many mouths to feed, for the pay is negligible. But Gary did his best, working up to 60 hours a week, arriving home in the dark of night exhausted and depleted of energy. After about three months of steady, monotonous cabdriving six days a week, he managed to get his budget in some semblance of order. There was food on the table, gas in the stove, and electricity in the lights. He felt that he was ready to move on to greener pastures, to seek more profitable employment, to increase his income, and improve the welfare of his family.

Honest and forthright, Gary went to his employer, the owner of the cab company, and requested a day off during the week, a day off to look for another job. His boss, a gruff, hard man, refused Gary's request out of hand. Gary tried reasoning with the man, and in the end almost begged for one single day off. His boss said, "Why should I give you a day off? I'd lose a damned good driver! I need all the drivers I can get. Now, you're wasting time and money. Get back to your cab."

Gary felt like he was in a vise. He couldn't just quit driving for the man. His children would suffer for his shortsightedness. And yet, if he didn't get at least one day off, how could he possibly look for a better job?

Gary came to me with his dilemma, because a friend advised him to. The first few minutes of our consultation were enough for me to see that Gary had come to one of those times in his life when he would have to be mentally aggressive, not docile, not obedient, not a sheep. I gave him this spell to cast over his boss:

I bind your unjust authority over me and my life. I bind your unfairness, your greed, your inhumanity. With all the heart-force of myself, my wife, and my children, I bind you from ruling over my life like a tyrant. Your power is weakening; your cruelty is dissipating; your domination is decreasing. I am a free man.

Gary mentalized this spell every day, usually when his boss was within his vision. After a week's time Gary's situation did not improve. In fact, it grew worse. He told me that his boss seemed to be working him even harder and longer now that he knew Gary wanted out.

I said, "Stick with it, Gary. Don't give up. You just keep mentalizing that power curse. He has power and authority as an employer, but believe me, it is nothing compared to the psychic force emanating from you, your wife, and your children. On the mental plane this force is working for you. Trust in it. Persevere. And remember this: it is not only your combined psychic energy at work. You are drawing even his energy into your own sphere. By reciting your curse, orally or mentally, you are using his strength, his forces, his potency. As he grows weaker, you grow stronger."

How Casting Spells Is Like Partaking of the Nature of Gods

Gary wanted to know how it is that he grows stronger as his boss grows weaker. I explained to him the ancient principle underlying the widespread custom of primitives to "eat their gods." It is a natural instinct of man to partake of the food that was offered to the gods, for he believed that the food was the body of the god. By eating the food, he was eating the god, and by eating the god, he was sharing divine substance.

In ancient Mexico a real man was thought to personify the corn spirit. He was thus sacrificed, divided up among the worshippers, and eaten. In this way, the people were assimilating the spirit or life of the god.

This primitive ritual comes down to us today in the communion of sophisticated and civilized religions. In the Roman Catholic Mass, for instance, the priest transforms the communion disc into the actual body of Christ, which is then given to the people to eat. Jesus said: "Take, eat; this is my body. Drink ye all of it; For this is my blood." (Matthew 26:26, 27.) Any priest can explain to you the mystical and spiritual truth of transubstantiation, the changing of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ. He can also explain how the partaking of these substances makes a man "one with Christ."

The same principle works when you cast a spell in this modern day and age. We no longer sacrifice human victims; we do not eat human flesh. Taken symbolically and internalized, you can see how the psychic energy and power of an oppressor can become your own. The old practice of killing and eating the god to become like the god has become a symbol for real mental and psychic events.

Spells Can Make You Self-Confident and Increase Your Worth

Gary did not give up. It was a time in his life for action, effective action, mental action. He continued using his curse to bind the will of his oppressing employer. After two weeks, when his boss still did not change in habit, behavior, or conduct, Gary started to despair. I could only tell him to maintain his vigil. Only those who endure reap the richest benefits of spell casting.

After the third week, Gary said, "My boss won't even talk to me now. All he does is fire orders at me. But I think you should know that, even working 60-hour weeks, I'm not feeling as depleted of energy. I'm feeling stronger every day. The curse is working. I know it is."

Gary had only four more days to persist. As it turned out, at that time he was driving a passenger a distance of 50 miles, so he had time to converse with the man. After hearing Gary talk, the man said, "You sound like a man with a head on his shoulders. What are you doing driving a cab?"

Gary explained his situation and when the passenger heard that Gary had five years' experience in office work, could type 60 words a minute, had a knack with filing systems, and was an experienced teletype operator, he gave Gary his business card and told him to drop by his place of business.

Gary told me, "He told me to come by the very next morning and not to worry about my boss firing me. 'You are obviously a young man of confidence and dependability,' he says to me. 'Don't give your boss another thought. Come to work for me.' I went to his office the next day—a real plush company!—and Mr. N. put me right to work. I've got my own office on the fifth floor, a secretary, and work that I enjoy. I work from nine to five with two breaks and an hour off for lunch—and I draw a salary of $1450 a month!"

I don't know how Gary's old boss is faring, but I wouldn't doubt for a moment that he has 90 percent less energy now that Gary has made off with it. Because I was interested in Gary's welfare, I called his new employer, Mr. N., and inquired as an interested friend into Gary's progress. Mr. N. said, "The boy is a living dynamo! I don't know what it was that drew me to him, but I'm glad he's on my team!"

The spell casting Gary was performing day in and day out had imbued him with personality and character that could be felt by Mr. N. That's what aroused his interest in Gary—psychic attraction.

How the Secret of Charms Makes Spells Work for You Today

The word "charm" derives from the Latin carmen, meaning song. It originally referred, not to a talisman or an amulet in the sense that we use it today, but meant the spell which was cast over the object. The carmen, or spell, consecrated the object and endowed it with magical power. Thus it was said that the spell "charmed" the object.

This secret of the ages reveals to you a potent truth. You can cast a spell over any object belonging to some other person and thereby affect that person's behavior, thoughts, and feelings. This secret becomes a powerful weapon against negative people, against oppressors, persecutors, liars, thieves, enemies, and those who would hold you back from achieving your heart's desire in this world.

She Fell Under the Tyranny of a Drunken Foster Father

Joanne T. needed help desperately for two reasons: one, she was living under the roof of a man who deceived the authorities, and who was a drunk, a liar, and a potential lecher; and two, she was caught in a terrible web: she could not complain because no one would believe her. She could not run away, for such an action would place her freedom in jeopardy. She would come under the authority of the police and only worsen her situation. She was "caught between the devil and the deep blue sea." Her foster father would not permit her to date, to stay out after nine p.m., to wear cosmetics, to smoke, to attend movie theaters, or to keep friends. Apparently a bigot to boot, he would only allow her to attend a specific church's services and meetings reflecting religious and spiritual values. It was due to this latter ruling that I came to meet Joanne. The meeting was dramatic. Attending one of my lectures with her foster mother, she waited for the opportunity, and then slipped a note into my hand surreptitiously. It read:

Please help me: I'm going to get into terrible trouble. I'm not being corny. I'm desperate. Help me.

The note supplied me with a phone number and the plea: "Please call between three and four in the afternoon any day except Saturday and Sunday." If I were not accustomed to the actions of desperate people, I suppose I would have tossed the note away. But I didn't. I called Joanne on a Tuesday, and it was then that I learned of the moral turpitude of her foster father. Joanne, I also learned, was no more than 14 years of age. She was frightened and apprehensive, and expressed her fear of rape at the hands of this man who was drinking more and more. After listening to this terror-stricken child I could understand her dramatics. And I proceeded to help her all I could. Here is the curse Joanne incanted while holding her foster father's smoking pipe:

May the smoke of this pipe becloud your thoughts. May confusion and darkness fill you each time you inhale. By this spell I charm this pipe, and by this charm you shall meet your destiny.

Why his pipe? Because it is a highly personal item. By casting a spell on the personal property of the malefactor, you "charm" it, and by charming it, you directly and cogently affect that person's life.

Joanne's spell set up a psychic atmosphere around the man every time he smoked his pipe. The results in Joanne's case came to me via a newspaper clipping. I was miles away at the time, but the joy and relief that I felt was as strong as if Joanne herself had relayed the news to me. The newspaper article reported that a man in Toledo, Ohio, a Mr. F., had tried to rape his foster daughter, but was stopped by a neighbor who had responded to the girl's screams. Mr. F. was arrested and charged with attempted rape. The unnamed girl was removed from the home.

I don't know where Joanne is today. Perhaps she will have to remain in foster homes until she is of legal age. But I know this: no matter where she lives, if she ever comes up against another deprived man, she has a dynamic spell to cast on him. Armed with this power spell, she can charm any personal item, and thwart the will of others.

How to Siphon the Energy of Negative People for Your Own Use

The personal property of people is imbued with their mana, their psychic substance. Casting a spell on such property directly affects the person owning it. If it is time in your life to do something positive, something active, and something dynamic about your situation, then you can cast a spell on the personal property of others to drain them of negative energy, to draw to yourself their positive energy, and leave them helpless and floundering. It does not matter what the item is.

Leroy H. was a football player who was being undermined by another player. He cast this spell on the man's football helmet:

I bind your animosity as this helmet binds your head. The more you wear this helmet, the less you can do against me.

This simple spell, cast with intensity and ardor, brought amazing results. The man did not stop undermining Leroy. He quit the team. His reason? He had suddenly been afflicted by painful migraine headaches!

Let me make clear that Leroy did not wish illness on his opponent. Rather, he cast a spell and the spell confounded the man's will to harm, and by karmic reaction, manifested itself by turning back on the man. The fact of the matter is, the man's migraine headaches were caused, not by Leroy, but by his own rebounding negativity.

This spell can work in a similar fashion when cast over a hat, a hair ribbon, a comb or brush, a kerchief, or any other personal item that comes into contact with the head. How it will work can only be ascertained after it has worked.

She Cast a Spell On a Car and Won the Man She Loved

Susan R. was helpless to compete with the greater beauty and moral laxity of the young woman who was stealing the man she loved. Susan had known this other woman for years and knew her to be a "man-user," a woman who was not serious in love, but used her sex as a tool for her own benefit. Susan was realistic enough to know that she could not cast a spell to attract her man; the other woman had him spellbound with her sexual behavior. So she cast this spell on the woman's automobile:

Whenever D. rides in this car he will see through your deception, your manipulation, your insincerity. May you fail to project a false facade. May you succeed in revealing your true nature.

Nine days later the man in question called on Susan and asked for a date. Susan said nothing, but went out with him. When he called again and again, dating her frequently, she said to him, "I thought you were falling in love with S." He replied, "That's impossible. There's nothing there to fall in love with." Susan and her man are to be married in June.

This spell can also be used on any number of other personal objects belonging to undesirable people.

A Spell for Affecting the Conduct of Others

Here is a short but galvanic spell designed to cover almost any case of unfair or unjust persecution:

By the powers that be I bind you from harming me further. Whenever you come into contact with this _____ your false power will increasingly disintegrate.

You can fill in the given blank space with any of the following items, as well as any which may seem more applicable. Many of them can be "borrowed" from the oppressor for a short time, long enough to charm it. Look for:

Pencil	Drinking cup
Pen	Watch
Jacket	Purse mirror
Coin	Automobile
Cigarette	Scissors
Book	Newspaper
Binoculars	Camera
Pipe	Ashtray
Typewriter	Pocketknife

chapter 12

How to Pray Prayers That Dispel Depression and Dark Moods in Yourself and in Loved Ones

I began a lecture in Taos, New Mexico, by asking this question of the audience: "What is the single most important quality common to all highly successful people?"

Here are some of the answers I received:

Toughness

Luck

Personality

Stick-to-it-ness

These are good answers, but the right one is: Highly successful people share in common the ability to deal positively with their dark moods and depression. The reason this quality is foremost is simple: money-making ability, toughness, luck, personality, stick-to-it-ness—all of these can be destroyed in the person who is slave to negative emotions, depressing situations, and moodiness.

How Power Prayers Cut Through Depression to Give You Increased Energy

Negative emotions are parasites. Like vampires, they suck your vitality, inner strength, and psychic energy. Depression alone saps ten times more energy than any one of a thousand other less negative emotions. To work in a depressed state is to work against yourself. To play in a state of depression is to forfeit nine-tenths of the pleasure. Depression states come to all of us at one time or another, but they needn't incapacitate us. Power prayers cut through depression, burn it off as the warm rays of the sun burn off early morning fog. And when depression is dissipated through the use of positive, effectual power prayers, vast amounts of misused psychic energy is released from bondage, energy you can then use constructively.

His Life Was Nothing But One Continuous "Woe Is Me"

Irving D. is a living example of a man who is slave to negative emotions. He is underweight, listless, enervated, continually down at the mouth, and joyless. One has only to listen to his words, to observe his attitude, to see the miasma of gloom he carries around with him. His language gives him away. He has many of the things other people have, and yet, take a look at his statements:

About his wife: "She's okay, I guess."

About his job: "I've had better ones."

About his appearance: "What difference does it make how I look?"

About his goals: "What will be, will be."

About his hopes: "I don't like to get my hopes too high. Life always knocks you down."

About life in general: "Life is a long hard struggle, uphill all the way."

I met Irving because his wife brought him to the meetings. I explained to him that he was literally beating himself to death by fostering attitudes like his.

He said, "But what can I do about it? Is it my fault if God made me the way He did?"

I said, "God did not make you weak and helpless. He did not create this horrible depression that blankets your life. Don't blame God for your lack of joy and fulfillment. You know as well as I do that God meant you to be joyful, happy, smiling. The Bible is filled with the promises of God, promises any man can claim as his own if he uses his God-given powers to obtain them. You can claim those promises right now if you want to. I'll give you a power prayer that can change your life if you will at least try to pray with fervor and determination."

Irving replied, "But I pray every Sunday in church."

I explained to Irving that he could say ten thousand "Our Fathers", but if he didn't infuse them with his own innate energy he may as well recite the alphabet 10,000 times.

The Faith Which Moves Mountains Is Within You

Faith is psychic energy, to put it in modern, scientific language. I explained this to Irving, and pointed out that to infuse a prayer with one's psychic energy is to pray the prayer of faith. Such prayers become strong and potent affirmations, soul-lifting prayers, light-bearing prayers, energy-inspiring prayers. In Matthew 9:29, Jesus says, "According to your faith be it unto you." According to your psychic energy be it unto you. Prayers void of human energy are empty words. Jesus also said: "When ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking." (Matthew 6:7.) We today can take Jesus at his word and pray prayers that explode worry, doubt, depression, and negativity. The key lies in the word "affirmation." Prayers of affirmation are power prayers, gloom-cutting prayers, depression-shattering prayers.

How His Power Prayer Destroyed Darkness and Depression

Here is the prayer that lifted Irving out of his swamp of festering depression:

I know that God, in His infinite intelligence, has gifted me with miraculous, wonder-working energy. I call upon it now to infuse this prayer, to empower it and make it work in my daily life. I affirm my own God-given ability to reach out for rainbows, to seek the sun, to experience joy and life more abundant.

At first Irving understood this prayer only on an intellectual level, but I instructed him to feel it, to emote it, to believe it. Two and a half weeks of constant and animated affirmation brought Irving remarkable dividends and made him as happy as the poor man who suddenly won a million dollars. He came to see me bursting with energy and vitality, his eyes afire, his face glowing with inner happiness, his step light and carefree.

He said, "It's a miracle! Boy, have my eyes been opened! Do you know that I have the sweetest, most wonderful wife in the world? How did I miss it before? And my job! I never knew how interesting it was till now. I feel like I've got new lungs, a new heart, a new mind! Is this what Jesus meant by being born again? I can think. I can breathe. I can laugh. I can't tell you how it feels. Joy is brimming inside me. I feel like fetters and chains have been lifted from me."

Irving is no longer the "woe is me" type of individual. He is now the "life is a bowl of cherries" type, the kind of man who greets others warmly, who smiles often, hums happy tunes, and works with joy.

Power prayers charged with your psychic energy dispel dejection, melancholy, despondency, down-heartedness, sadness, and increase your joy, happiness, delight, cheerfulness, and pleasure.

Why Witches Pray to Lucifer

In this latter part of the Twentieth Century, this age of the occult explosion, it is not surprising to meet men and women interested in astrology, witchcraft, Tarot, necromancy, divination, and a hundred other occult sciences. Our society is a truly mixed one: a society marked by unprecedented toleration and brotherhood. The Christian and the astrologer live together. The Hebrew and the witch live next door to each other. The religious and the irreligious work together. Surely this turn of events is a sign of the Aquarian Age, the age of the Water-Bearer, which means the age of togetherness, peace, nondiscrimination, understanding, and brotherly love. People therefore are now allowed to pray as they see fit, in their own way, in church or out of church, to God, gods, stars, planets, or even so-called devils. I say "so-called" because in this modern day and age it is becoming increasingly clear that many of the one-time devils are gods in their own right. This explains why witches pray to Lucifer. In the older books of the Old Testament, for example, the devil freely visits the throne of God. He is an angel and a member of God's court. In the book of Zachariah, when Joshua stands before God, the devil is right at his side. Lucifer means "light-bringer" or "light-bearer" and there are traces of a tradition among witches that Lucifer was the sun.

I learned all of this from a practicing white witch, Beverly Q., of Tulsa, Oklahoma. By listening to her with an open mind, by observing her and other members of her coven, I came to see that witches pray power prayers, too, in their own way. Without knowing it, they too draw down potent psychic energy by praying with fervor, hope, expectation. Beverly prays:

Lucifer, Lucifer, light and fire, light for me the path to joy.
Spread thy light throughout my life and banish negativity from my realm. Lucifer, Lucifer, sun of the morning, sun of the night, lift me from darkness, depression and defeat.

Any reader of this book who wishes to use the above prayer is free to do so, but I do not recommend it to those who feel it goes against their religious beliefs. Prayers of affirmation can also be Christian prayers, Hebrew prayers, Moslem prayers, Buddhist prayers. The important thing is not the prayer you pray, but the way you pray it. If you want negative emotion transformed in your life, pray with strength, power, faith.

Five Secrets to Praying Prayers That Abolish Darkness and Depression

Here are the five secrets for living without depression. They have proven effective in the lives of housewives, children, business executives, factory workers, laborers, celebrities, and athletes. They involve no more than treating your psychic energy as the divine gift that it truly is, the matrix of all you were, are, and will be.

Secret Number One: Turn to prayer. I have met people who have tried to fight depression by getting drunk, taking drugs, or indulging in sexual excess. These negative activities sap vital psychic energy. In the end, depression and darkness return with greater force. Prayers of affirmation dispel the causes of depression by attacking it on the proper plane—the psychic plane.

Secret Number Two: Increase the octane of your psychic energy. If normal desire in prayer can bring blessings (which it can) then zest in prayer will wreak miracles. Separate the prayer from the goal, and any prayer will be lifeless and ineffectual. Join the praying to the goal, and most any mood, depression, and gloom can be dissipated. Learn the importance of praying with gusto. Associate the goal of the prayer with some need of your own, such as exploding depressing situations or demolishing progress-hindering emotions.

Secret Number Three: Unload yourself. People who carry balls and chains around with them all day should not wonder why they feel listless, tired, sapped of energy. Grudges, ha-treds, dark feelings, animosity, enmity, rebelliousness, inferiority—all of these are balls and chains. Ill feelings and resentments are burdens. You can hear people speak of them as “a load on my chest” or “a load on my mind.” These are spirit-annihilating and life-sucking weights. Drop them. Let them go, and pray your power prayers of affirmation to let in light, love, and peace. Modern psychology has proven that emotional conflicts use up more energy than the toughest kind of physical labor. Depression can tire you out faster than any physical endeavor.

Secret Number Four: Use your decompression chamber. It stands to reason that you should not use your powerful emotions in negative ways. Emotion used in prayers of affirmation make it possible for you to side-step depressing situations altogether. Human emotion is a volatile thing, precious and valuable. Some people I have met have hair triggers on their emotional mechanism. They supercharge situations which do not call for emotion. Leo M., of Scranton, Pennsylvania, got into trouble with the law when he angrily hit another man for something the man had said. I told him, “If a tiger attacks you in a jungle, you may need the emotion of anger to subdue it, or the emotion of fear to put wings on your feet. But you need neither anger nor fear when someone makes a petty remark.”

In order to feel our best, to feel light and happy, we need a reservoir of psychic energy and emotion. Misuse of these keeps them at a too low level. Learn to take life's situations into your decompression chamber, so that touchy conditions can be de-potentiated. Learn to accept the fact that neither the world nor people are perfect, and stop misusing valuable energy and emotion for unimportant matters.

Secret Number Five: Charge your prayers. Too many people say prayers like they're reading a newspaper aloud. Emotion saved from misuse can be channeled into prayers to make them affirmative, powerful, response-drawing, life-changing—truly effective.

Prayers That Travel at the Speed of Light, Any Distance, to Any Destination

It never ceases to amaze me how many people fail to realize that prayer, as an invisible agency, nonmaterial and vibrational, can penetrate solid walls, travel through space at terrific speed, and can be beamed anywhere in the universe. Think about that, and you will begin to appreciate the marvelous power we have at our disposal. No wonder the Bible says we are as gods. If we think of some god who comes down from heaven or visits us in a space ship and has the ability to penetrate barriers with his thoughts, we marvel. And yet, we already have this magic! We can pray, transmit our emotion, beam our psychic energy anywhere we choose. We are gods!

A supreme example of a man who claimed this truth as his own is Glenn T., of Atlantic City, New Jersey. His sister was suffering acute depression, brought on by her physical condition of nervousness, ulcers, and arthritis.

Glenn prayed, "O Light of Love, Light of Peace, spare my sister her agony. Lift from her frail shoulders this burden of depression and want. Penetrate her gloom, lift her heart, shine in her life. This I pray with utter devotion and with all of my heart."

Not only did Glenn's sister emerge from her suffocating atmosphere of gloom and depression—her nervousness ceased, her ulcers cleared up, and the arthritic pain is all but gone! The point to remember is this: Glenn's sister lives in California, more than 3,000 miles away. Between them are thousands of physical objects, veritable seas of psychic blocks, millions of thoughts, feelings and emotions of others. But his prayer, affirmative and charged, is like a spear cutting through the flesh of a dragon, effortlessly finding its target, its goal, its destination, and bringing peace and joy into the life of a loved one.

Prayer is a godly gift, divine, magical, uncanny, supernatural. Use it accordingly with faith, feeling, and fearlessness.

chapter 13

Chants That Increase Your Power of Memory and Concentration

A man in Louisville, Kentucky, once asked me: "Why would I want to increase the power of my memory and concentration?" The answer I gave him was sufficient to inspire him to attend every one of the ten lectures I gave on "Power Chants for Memory Power."

I said, "The ability to remember names, dates, and faces, and the ability to concentrate with precision, augments your character, develops your personality, and increases your salary." Upon hearing this, he became my most astute client.

How Chanting Can Lift You Out of the Realm of the Ordinary

Chants designed to clear the mind of extraneous thoughts, ideas, and daydreams which scatter and diffuse your attention, can give you a retentive memory and powers of concentration that will astound and impress employers, family and friends, abilities which automatically lift you out of the stream of ordinary people and make you stand out as personable, dependable, and sometimes uncanny.

She Chanted to Clear Her Mind and Developed Remarkable Powers

Gloria T. came to me with a problem. She was a clerk typist in a small firm in Boston, Massachusetts, working under less than ideal conditions. She was not only a typist, but she was expected to dust the office furniture, sweep the floors daily, and generally keep the place looking neat and tidy. This state of affairs frustrated and angered Gloria.

She said, "I read your brochure about these lectures and I would like to learn to chant in order to clear my mind of thoughts that interfere with my life. I don't want to feel frustrated or angry. I want to do my job and live happily. I know there is a lot of male chauvinism where I work. The men expect me to be den mother, housekeeper, and maid as well as clerk typist. Male chauvinism exists, but I don't want to fight against men. I like men. I would rather work on myself and help myself to develop the ability to cope even under these conditions."

I gave Gloria this chant:

The Street-Cleaning Chant

Energy and rays of light are sweeping through my mind like a street-cleaner sweeps through the city. Extraneous thoughts and negative debris are being sucked away, leaving my mind free for greater, higher potential.
Sweep, O energy, clear my brain
Sweep and set me free.
Sweep, O energy, clear my brain
Sweep and let me be me.

After just three weeks of chanting, Gloria discovered that she could "sweep" through her daily chores painlessly. But there was a surprising side-effect. One day while cleaning up the manager's office, Gloria happened to be present during a slight rift between him and his secretary. The man had asked the secretary for the latest material on a certain business contract. The secretary first tried to recall the data. She could not. So then she went in search of her notes. She couldn't find them. Then she suggested calling the client to refresh her memory. The manager grew quite irritable, and understandably so. Businessmen have no time for dallying. Quite innocently, Gloria said, "May I say something? You spoke with Mr. R. of M. Enterprises last Thursday afternoon about three. At that time you were disappointed because the man you were speaking with, and trying to sell, refused your contract offer and requested a lower price. You decided on $35,600, which Mr. R. then accepted. You promised him the first shipment of goods by this weekend, a partial shipment of 500 pounds, the balance to reach his company no later than September 5."

Gloria's boss was so impressed with this display of memory and information recall that he had her sit down and write it out. Gloria herself was totally amazed.

She said, "I don't understand how all that information came to me like that. Sure, I was present that Thursday when he spoke with Mr. R., but so was his secretary."

I explained to Gloria that her process of chanting to clear her mind of one thing, cleared it of all extraneous matter, and made of it an open and receptive channel for pertinent information. What your ears hear, your brain records for all time. Getting the recorded data back is the trick. Gloria developed the right capacity for such memory recall by chanting.

I might add here that an interesting reversal has taken place at Gloria's place of business. She is the secretary, and the secretary is now the clerk typist, den mother, housekeeper and maid.

How a Losing Gambler Chanted and Changed His Luck

I didn't know that Russell V. was an inveterate gambler. I also didn't know that he was a loser, a man who was spending his paychecks, his bonds and his savings on horses. He introduced himself as a traveling salesman, which he is. I learned of his gambling habits only after he had achieved success through chanting. He asked me for a chant that would help develop his memory and concentration.

He said, "In my business, every minute you are in a potential customer's home counts for a lot. I have to carry this big notebook around with me, filled with testimonials and scientific proofs of the worth of the product I sell. But it's always a hassle trying to impress the customer and read from that thing at the same time. I'd like to memorize the thing, all the information, and also know my product inside out."

I gave Russell a chant designed to activate recall and sharpen powers of concentration.

The Sponge Chant

Soak up knowledge, brain of mine
 Reveal your hidden secrets
 Repel the superfluous, absorb the pertinent
 And give me sight and secrets.
 Soak up the valuable, channeling mind
 Open the deepest doors
 Reject the idle, retain the rich
 And give me your costly stores.

Russell used this chant daily to develop the memory he needed. It worked so well that his sales picked up and more money was available to him. At $20 a sale he was taking in $150 a day—on his slow days!

Because he was doing so well with the chant—one housewife told him he was a "supersalesman"—Russell decided to use the chant at the racetrack. He wrote me and revealed this new use for chanting. His letter said:

There was a time when I had all I could do to keep up with the information in the racing forms. That's all changed

now. After two months of chanting I find that my mind soaks up any information I want it to. Just the other day I was at the Del Mar Racetrack and I noticed that in the fifth race, the favorite was Eagle's Nest. But a horse named Comet was also running. Something happened in my mind. I suddenly recalled that Comet ran at Santa Anita and had come in second. I even remembered that the jockey who had ridden him was riding him here. Comet had come in second, like I said, and to a horseplayer that means he has potential. It was a longshot, but I played it anyway. Well, the favorite came in second. Comet won! I had placed $50 on his nose. The track paid 18 to 1 odds. Just in case you aren't a horseplayer, that means that I got eighteen dollars for every dollar I bet. Figure it out. For $50 I received $900!

I have received a series of letters from Russell in this vein. In fact, reading his letters is like reading a racing form. He has horses' names, dates, track records, odds, figures and facts on the tip of his tongue. His mind is apparently a very open channel for information stored away in his subconscious mind.

How Chants Make the Good Better and the Better Best

The process of memory revivification through chanting can be adapted in numerous different ways. I have seen the changes in people's lives, not only in their memories and faculties of concentration, but in their very personalities.

The uses and value of increased memory recall and powers of concentration are too numerous to list. Everyone can benefit materially and socially by improving their memories. Good salesmen become better salesmen. Doctors can become great doctors. Secretaries can become fantastic secretaries. Students, actors, policemen, factory workers, mechanics, artists—all can develop amazing powers of memory and concentration by applying effort and determination. And their development will reflect in their social lives, in their businesses, and in their bank accounts.

When you chant to clear away the refuse of the brain, you make it an apt receptacle for pertinent, valuable information, which you may then recall at will to better yourself, help others, make your job easier, and generally lighten your life.

How a Truckdriver Earned $2500 in Two Minutes

Doug F. drives a semi between Boston, Massachusetts, and Hartford, Connecticut, three times a week. He chants while driving because he plans to go into business for himself, but to do so he feels he needs stronger memory recall and the ability to concentrate on details. In short, he chants for self-improvement reasons. But the chanting paid off big.

Stopping for a red light in Hartford one afternoon, Doug happened to see a man crossing the street. On the surface, the man's face was but one of scores passing in front of Doug's truck. But the face rang a bell, clicked in Doug's mind. Suddenly alerted, he left his truck right where it was, ran over to a policeman, and pointed the man out to him. What he told the policeman made the lawman act quickly. He drew his revolver and stopped the man in the street, put him up against the wall, searched him, found a gun and packets of heroin. The policeman had Doug call in to the station and a squad car came for the criminal. Doug received $2500 reward for the capture of this man.

What made Doug pile from the cab of his truck and report the presence of a passer-by to a policeman? Just this: as he sat in his cab, Doug's mind, open and free of debris through chanting, suddenly reported to him that the face he was looking at was the same face he had seen on a post office reward poster! Doug had become a bounty hunter for one exciting day in his life.

Power Chants for Memory Power

Awaken, sleeping thoughts
 Arise, dormant knowledge
 Become, O Mind, as a school
 Become, O Mind, as a college.

Burgeon, O flowers of insight and ideas
 Bloom forth to lighten my life
 Spring forth, O waters of imagination
 Flow and wash away strife.

Sun of my mind, sun of my mind
 Shine forth in all thy glory;
 Rays of might, rays of light
 Change my dreary story.

These chants are being used by people from all stations in life, from Florida to California, from Texas to Canada, wherever I have given lectures on their power. You may use them as they are or as inspiration to create your own.

When producing chants of your own—think Light!

chapter 14

How to Curse Worry, Anxiety, Fear, Doubt, and Indecision

If you worry about money—
If you are anxious about bills—
If you fear someone or something—
If you doubt your capability to cope—
If you can't take decisive action—

STOP!

Stop a moment.
Pause and consider this:

Witches did not worry; others worried about them!
Magicians were not anxiety ridden; others were anxious about them!
Warlocks had no fears; they were surrounded by people who feared!
Sorcerers did not doubt; they frightened doubters!
Saints never wavered; they guided indecisive people!

These self-possessed individuals never stopped at obstacles, never flagged in their determination to excel, and yet, they were no different from you or I. Unwittingly, they tapped that inner reservoir of dynamic psychic energy, the untold forces of the subconscious mind. They employed powerful curses to combat worry, anxiety, fear, doubt, and indecision. So can you. So can any man who dares take hold of the scientific truth that mind power is real and present, capable of development and available for every man's use. I have befriended, counseled, and lectured many people from sandry walks of life who have used power curses to counterattack these life-destroying, joy-depleting, energy-sapping forces.

She Cursed the Thing That Was Worrying Her to Death

Worry over finances was literally weakening Agnes B. to death. A widow of 40, the mother of five children, she was working part time jobs as a nurses' aide, caring for the sick and the elderly. I could sympathize with her problem, but I had to correct her intentions.

She said, "There is never enough money to meet my bills. I often have to rob Peter to pay Paul. I do the best that I can. But bill collectors have no sympathy. They dun me, hound me, demand payments I can't make. I want a curse that will put a stop to them."

I said, "Now wait a minute. You never want to do something rashly. If I gave you a curse to employ against bill collectors, innocent people could become victims of psychic attack. Not all bill collectors are unsympathetic or hard-nosed. No, what you need is a curse which will alleviate the pressures of your worrying. Clear your psychic atmosphere of that nagging worry and you will open windows of your mind to let in some fresh air."

How Curses Transform Negative Energy into Positive Energy

I explained to Agnes that energy is fundamentally neutral. It is how we use it that makes it negative or positive, helpful or destructive. Even atomic energy is first of all, neutral. How we employ that energy determines its destructiveness or its creativity, for while it can destroy mankind off the face of this earth, it can also be put to constructive use and make this world a veritable Eden for man to live in peacefully. Energy cannot be destroyed; only tapped, developed, used, and channeled into positive or negative utilization. This modern discovery points up a truth which was known to Jesus thousands of years ago: man has the ability to separate the chaff from the wheat. By cursing the chaff of worry, we separate it from the wheat of inner peace, and in the process, we withdraw precious psychic energy from negative use and rechannel it into positive use in our lives.

I stressed this point to Agnes: by cursing negative traits—and not human beings—we transform energy into positive charges, enabling us to achieve, perform, attain, and excel.

The Curse That Worries Worry

I gave Agnes this curse:

Worry, worry, curse you, curse you.
Energy mine, return to me.
Worry, worry, die of starvation.
No energy mine shall you devour.
Banish, vanish, go and never return!

Agnes's use of this curse, given added strength by the fact that she had five children to feed and care for, released her from bondage to worry. Once released, she was free to concentrate on her work, live each day as it came, and leave tomorrow to itself. The first sign that the curse was working for her came when she noticed that one young bill collector who had previously been rather curt and rude to her had suddenly changed his attitude and went out of his way to help her. But the biggest change came later.

Agnes said, "The most fantastic thing has happened! There's this man I have been caring for on Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, a man ten years older than I. He was recovering from a severe heart attack and needed a part time nurse. Well, he's much better now, so my services were no longer needed. On my last day, last Saturday, I gave him a small parting gift. I always grow very fond of my patients. When I was ready to leave, he said the most amazing thing. He said, "Agnes, Will you marry me?" I laughed because I thought he was joking. But he was very serious. He said he needed me and he pointed out that my children need him. This is true, but what do you think? Should I marry this kind man whom I hardly know?"

I asked, "Do you like him?"

Agnes said, "Yes. I'm very fond of him."

"Then love will grow," I said.

Agnes married the man and she doesn't worry about bill collectors any longer, for her new husband had not told her everything about himself. For example, he had not mentioned the fact that he owned two businesses, one in Alabama, another in Utah, with combined assets of something like $1,250,000. He had not told her that he held stocks worth thousands, that his savings accounts were in six figures, or that he owned half interest in a small but profitable shipping line.

Agnes recognized that there was a direct link between her cursing worry and marrying this secret tycoon. She said, "When I cursed worry in my life, I took better care of myself. In enjoying each day as it came, I grew healthier, better looking, and happier. I think this appealed to Mr. M. I think I understand now what you mean when you say that cursing worry transforms negative energy into positive energy. I feel positive, look positive, think positive. You can bet I'll curse worry any time it tries to interfere with our newfound happiness."

Curses That Separate the Wheat from the Chaff

If you keep in mind that you are cursing negative traits, feelings, attitudes, and conditions, and not human beings, then there are curses available to you for freeing yourself from worry, anxiety, fear, doubt, and indecision. Curses of this type cut through self-defeating negativity like a scythe cuts through murderous weeds.

The Scythe Curse Against Worry-Weeds

Witches used to curse the labors and deeds of country folk. This curse against worry-weeds works on the same principle:

Weeds of worry, tares of oppression, I curse your growth, your labor, your deeds. May my impassioned oath cut a swathe before me to make my way straight. Never more shall you choke the life of my energy. I cut you down now with this curse.

The DDT Curse That Destroys Anxiety

Roger D. was suffering terrible anxious feelings because of imminent college exams, anxiety that was sapping his vital energy. Elliot F. had a similar affliction because he had a big and important business deal in the offing. Both men used this curse and received the stamina they needed to carry through to victory.

I curse the feelings that rattle my nerves, make me uncertain, becloud my thinking. With the deadly spray of fervent emotion I curse this static in my psychic environment. I am calm, steady, equal to the task.

The Voodoo Curse That Massacres Fear

Everyone is familiar with the voodoo practice of sticking pins into a doll to afflict or kill an enemy. This nefarious practice can be put to positive use when you curse fear. Fear becomes the image, psychic energy the pin.

Betty P. of Providence, Rhode Island, had an all-consuming fear that her father would punish her terribly. At the age of ten he had punished her severely for having exposed herself carelessly to poison ivy. Now at the age of 17 Betty was pregnant and unmarried. She naturally associated the earlier experience and its consequences with this experience. The human heart works that way, which is sometimes the basis of unwarranted fears. I told Betty that her monstrous fear was only hurting herself and the unborn baby and advised her to curse the fear. After she had done so, once she was free again, she was mentally and emotionally strong enough to "face the music." But there was no music. As it turned out, her father was not angry, indignant, or outraged. On the contrary, he was understanding, helpful and forgiving. In short, Betty had nothing to fear to begin with, and yet her fear was destroying the health of herself and her infant. Betty cursed her fear and came to understand what Bovee meant when he said: "There is great beauty in going through life fearlessly. Half our fears are baseless, the other half discreditable."

Here is Betty's voodoo curse:

Image of fear, dreadful effigy, I curse you with penetrating feeling, stabbing energy, spearing emotion. With each thought of my heart you die a little more. Die, O slimy fear, die!

The Guillotine Curse That Decapitates Doubt

Shakespeare said, "Our doubts are traitors, And make us lose the good we oft might win." Traitors should be executed, beheaded, guillotined. On the psychic level the guillotine curse accomplishes exactly that.

Roy E. of Scranton, Pennsylvania doubted that he could win the hand of the girl he wanted. But he did.

Daniel R. of Sheboygan, Wisconsin doubted that he would win a company promotion. But he did.

Matthew S. of Pickens, South Carolina doubted that he could be the winner in a $25,000 sweepstakes. But he was.

Alice L. of Calhoun, Texas doubted that she would graduate from high school. But she did.

Bruce P. of Marshall, Tennessee doubted his qualifications to enter an ice-skating contest. He's now a hockey star.

Edna S. of Harding, West Virginia doubted that people would accept a female pastor. She is now the minister of a huge congregation.

Howard T. of Elk Basin, Wyoming doubted that he would ever realize his acting dreams. He is now a movie star in Hollywood.

All of these doubting people used the following guillotine curse against their traitorous doubts.

Undermining doubt, traitor within, I charge you with conspiracy to overthrow my life and sentence you to death by guillotine. The sharp blade of my psychic energy now falls swiftly to cut off your influence with finality.

The Key to Remember When Using Power Curses

Energy is neutral; neither positive nor negative. The key to using curses effectively to better yourself and your life is simply that curses transform energy from bad uses to good uses. The purpose of the curses outlined in this chapter for you is the conversion of psychic energy—its conversion from negative to positive, its transfer from wrong use in worry, anxiety, fear, doubt, and indecision to the right use in freeing you from self-defeating traits, attitudes and undermining habits. No one should be the victim of these traitorous emotions. You can curse them and win, rise, excel.

He Said, "I Don't Know Whether I Should Ask for a Raise or Not."

Leon K. needed more money, higher income, but he was undecided about the course he should take—ask for a raise or work two jobs. Some wise man said, "He who hesitates is lost." I told Leon to curse his indecision. He did, and with nothing to lose, he went to his employer and boldly requested a raise. His boss could have refused his request, but he didn't. Even if the boss had, Leon would have been a better man, a stronger individual, for having overcome his tendency to be indecisive.

Curses Free You from Slavery, Bondage, and Captivity

The negative traits of worry, anxiety, fear, doubt, and indecision are like cruel slavemasters that chain you, bind you, suck out your priceless psychic energy. Curses are like liberators, veritable war lords, which can set you free, unloose your fetters, and release you from prison.

Curses used properly, suffused with emotional desire, and permeated with energy can be the greatest allies and friends modern man ever had. All it takes is the fortitude to employ them. Those who have been oppressed long enough, who have endured months or years of deprivation, who have suffered lack and poverty, will be the first to stand up for their divine rights in this sense. These forward-looking, goal-directed individuals use curses to obtain what they desire out of an otherwise ordinary life. The same opportunity is open to you.

chapter 15

How to Cast Spells for Fun and Profit

There has been enough research into witchcraft, black magic, Satanism, ritual magic, and ceremonial magic to adequately show that men and women in all ages have used spells to help themselves, to gain riches, to combat enemies, and to generally brighten their own lives. And there has been enough modern research, experimentation, and laboratory testing to show that spells still work. Only the names have been changed. Concrete results brought about by the casting of spells were once attributed to dark forces, mysterious vibrations, and demons. Today we speak of psi phenomena, telepathy, hypnosis, and psychic ability. But the fact remains that no matter what we call it, spells work because of the latent powers residing in the subconscious, the reservoir of untapped psychic energy.

The Black Magician Aleister Crowley was well-aware of this psychological truth. In his work, Liber Samekh, written as early as 1921, he points out that the powers of the magician derived from the unconscious. He wrote: "It is said among men that the word Hell deriveth from the word 'helan,' to hele or conceal, in the tongue of the Anglo-Saxons. That is, it is the concealed place, which since all things are in thine own self, is the unconscious."

As Crowley knew, the magician, through the use of spells, asserted his divine power and his mastery of the universe. By liberating the forces of his unconscious the magician released the power that controls all things in the universe. By the casting of spells, by uttering words empowered with psychic energy, the magician created "vibrations" which flowed out from him and affected all that they touched.

Whether we look on this today as scientific and psychological or as mystical and magical does not alter the fact that spells can work.

They Didn't Believe That Spell-Casting Works

When I speak like this in lectures I meet many people who find it difficult to believe that spells work. They often believe that prayer works, but not spells. And yet both derive their power and energy from the same source—the unconscious mind. I have pointed this out to many men and women across the country, and some were open-minded enough to put it to the test. My secretaries keep records of my clients, counselings, and consultations. I like to know when cases are successful, when they fail, why they are successful, why they fail. This is the statistical approach to investigation. Among these statistics are cases of people who have approached the use of spells in a spirit of fun, half-doubt, curiosity. Keith L. of Denver, Colorado is a case in point.

He Cast a Spell on a Carrousel—and It Worked!

Keith said, "I work at an amusement park. If spells really work then I should be able to make the carrousel stop."

It was a challenge, I knew. I often indulge people like Keith for various reasons. One, I can see by meeting them that they are not antagonistic, just skeptical. Two, I am certain that the spell will work—if the doubter has the ability to tap his secret supply of psychic energy. And three, when such people actually see a spell work, it gives them added impetus and inspiration to go on to bigger and better things. Some people, as Jesus pointed out, need to see "signs."

I gave Keith this spell:

The Wheel-Stopping Spell

Spin no more, turn no more, cease thine incessant circling, Slow, slow, spin slower, slower, slower. Spin no more, turn no more. Stop, I say. Stop!

Note the repetition of the "S" sound. We find this "essing" sound in many words connected with magical forces: sex, Satan, sorcery, spells, serpent. It sets up powerful vibrations in the cosmic atmosphere. How this vibration worked in Keith's case is as follows:

He said, "I was working a ticket booth when I tried it. The place was crowded, as usual, so I concentrated on the spell the way you told me to. I guess I did that for about a half hour, then when I felt ready, I stared at the carrousel and, with all the force I could muster, I cast the spell. It worked! Right before my eyes, the darned thing started faltering. It slowed down. I could see R.'s face, the guy who runs it. He couldn't understand it. He started fidgeting with the mechanism, but the carrousel kept slowing down. The more I mentalized the spell, the slower the carrousel ran. Then it stopped dead. I never laughed so hard in my life! But here's the amazing thing. R. was standing around scratching his head in confusion when I stopped mentalizing the spell. The carrousel started up of its own accord! During the lunch break, I asked R. what had happened. He was completely dumfounded and could only remark that it had never happened before. He always kept the machine in perfect working order and now that it was working fine again, he had no explanation of how the carrousel could have stopped when the brake was still off."

I listened to Keith's animated story and let him enjoy his mirth. When I felt he had derived enough pleasure from his little jaunt, I said, "Now turn the whole thing around. Internalize what happened.

You cast a spell and a carousel stopped. But what good did it do you except to prove to you that spells can work? Let me tell you a great secret about that spell you cast. If you will imbue it with just as much psychic energy and cast it over the spinning wheel of life, you can change your life for the better. Think about it. Many people use expressions like 'going around in circles' and 'my life is one big spinning wheel.' The same spell can get you off of the merry-go-round of dull living, fruitless labor, and unsuccessful effort."

How Death Was Cheated of a Young Victim

The Wheel-Stopping Spell has at least once been used in a highly constructive manner. Keith used it "just for fun." But John H. used it in quite another way when he found himself thrust by fate into a strange situation.

John related to me how he had been strolling along a busy street in Twin Falls, Idaho, when he suddenly saw a little girl running into the street after her ball. At the same time a car was bearing down on her, unseen, speeding, death on wheels. Time seemed to stand still, John told me, and the phrase "death on wheels" leapt into his head. Instantly, powerfully, he cast the Wheel-Stopping Spell. Tires squealed. The tons of steel and glass stopped just short of the little girl, who was nonchalantly bending over, retrieving her ball. John approached a driver white of face and trembling. The driver was shocked, amazed, consternated, for he swore that he had not had time to apply the brakes. John reports that the wheels locked!

Is there an explanation for this astounding phenomenon? The witch would have one explanation, the parapsychologist another. The ancient mystic would have one theory, the modern researcher another.

How a Young Woman Casts Spells to Attract Men

While I can often point up the spiritual benefits of spell-casting to fun-loving individuals, I never deny others the right to live their lives the way they see fit. If a person wants to use precious psychic energy for physical pleasure, that's his or her business. I am not a judge. So I don't judge Doreen K.

Doreen is 21, living alone in a small apartment in Appling, Georgia. A typical "southern belle," full of life and vivacity, Doreen wanted a spell which would attract men into her life.

She said, "I want more fun out of life. I'm tired of being a mousy little goodie-miss-two-shoes. I work as a receptionist five days a week in a building that doesn't even have windows. I feel caged. My evenings are utterly boring. I'm positively going out of my mind. A girl needs some fun once in a while."

I had no idea of what Doreen considered "fun," and it was none of my business. I gave her a spell which has been used successfully by others to bring light and delight into their lives. Doreen uses it to attract men.

The Flower-and-the-Bee Spell

If you ever wanted to know what was meant when puritanical parents whispered about "learning about the birds and the bees," this spell reveals the secret. Most laymen think that bees move from flower to flower in order to accumulate pollen for their own mysterious uses, but the horticulturist has always known that bees are cross-pollinating. It is thanks to busy bees that flowers grow at all, for bees transfer vital pollen from the male of one flower to the female of another, thus playing a part in the "sexual life" of flowers. It is this horticultural fact that underlies this spell:

Take wing, O Bee of Love, and bring to me the perfect he (or she, in the case of a woman) to give me glee. Buzz with beauty, fly in fun, bring to me the perfect one.

Doreen's filed letter says: "Thank you so much for the wonderful spell and for instructing me in how to use it. I feel like Cinderella—ten times over! The new men in my life are simply divine! Now I know what 'busy as a bee' means. I can't tell you how grateful I am. My weeks are so filled now that I'm breathless from dancing and swimming and playing and attending theater. It's marvelous! And this weekend I'm off to Hawaii for a few days with a most attractive gentleman. I had to limit the trip because I have a date next Tuesday evening with another man (who is sometimes a gentleman). I'm sorry it took me so long to write, but I've been so very busy lately."

Spell-Casting Can Bring More Fun into Your Life

There is no doubt in my mind that more fun can be had through the use of spells if fun is what one wants. My files show that 23 men have used the Flower-and-the-Bee Spell to attract the woman they loved, 68 women have employed it to win the love of desired men. In these cases the spellbinder desired only one mate. My files reflect that these cases occurred before the 1960's, the time of the Sexual Revolution in this country. Since the 1960's more and more cases crop up in which men and women use the spell for attracting more than one mate. Whatever the person's predilection, however, all have reported an increase of fun and pleasure in their lives.

When you cast a spell, expect it to work, and no matter what you are seeking will appear in your life, given the prerequisite psychic energy and force of impact. I usually point this out to fun-lovers: the spell that can bring fun into a dull life can also bring peace into a troubled life.

He Wanted a Spell That Would Attract Business and Increase His Profits

Tony P. was a skeptic when I met him. He isn't a skeptic now. Tony wanted a power spell "just for the heck of it" to see if he could change his situation. The owner and operator of a small gasoline station on a side street of Carroll, Illinois, Tony desired more business.

He said, "There's no way I can increase my business. The main street has a huge, modern station, complete with waiting room, four pits, seven employees, and all the modern conveniences. Cars pour in there every day. I'm just no competition. I've tried everything in my power and nothing has worked. So what have I got to lose? Give me a spell and I'll try that, too."

The Spell That Reroutes Traffic

This spell, which I gave to Tony, was originally designed to rechannel psychic energy. I gave it a material face because Tony's problem was material.

Forces of power, channels of might, direct to me now the people and things which will increase my wealth, remove my burden, illuminate my life. Forces of power, channels of might, increase my stature, increase my height.

Tony cast this spell forcibly day in and day out for seven months, even though his business did not pick up appreciably. When he grew discouraged, I assured him that with perseverance and continued energetic effort, the spell would work in ways he knew not of. I suggested that he trust in the idea that his spell emanations were indeed affecting his situation. He would have to be patient.

When, after the seven-month period, Tony learned that the city fathers had been planning to reroute through-city traffic, he realized that this change was in its planning stages during the seven months he had been casting the spell. The results of the city planning affected Tony directly, for the alternate route chosen to take through-traffic around the town included the street on which Tony owned his station.

Today the big and modern station is a hulking shell, empty and abandoned. Tony's business is flourishing.

The Power Spell That Amazes Skeptics Every Time

Due to my dealings with people who tend to disbelieve in the power of their innate psychic energy, I developed a general power spell designed for use by skeptics. You will notice a blank space in this spell, the space to be filled in by you with the word or words of your choice.

I am contacting unknown and mysterious forces. With complete faith I am opening myself to powers which can bring me what I want. Come into my life in a powerful way and prove thy presence by giving to me _____.

S., Peter, age: 29; occupation: bus driver; city and state: Palm Beach, Florida. He writes: "All I asked for was a girl, any girl, so long as it was one who would really like me. I now have a sweetheart who idolizes me! She thinks I'm a great swimmer. I'm a poor swimmer! But she thinks I'm great and says she feels safe when she is with me. That's magic!"

D., Charles, age: 33; occupation: stockman; city and state: Claymont, Delaware. He said, "I know I was pretty strong about my unbelief when you spoke on casting spells, but after mentalizing that spell for a few months, thinking about getting a better job, a position in the sales department became vacant. Just for kicks, I went to the boss, and said, 'How about letting me fill in there?' I cast the spell mentally as I asked this. The boss said, 'Sure, why not give you a try.' I've still got the cushy job!"

M., Joy, age: 11; occupation: none; city and state: Ada, Idaho. This little girl wrote: "My doll and carriage came just like you said. A rich lady moved away and she gave them to me because she didn't want to move them. Every day I write the spell on a new page in my diary. I can almost remember it by heart."

Why Spells Should Not Be Cast in Jest

Remember that I carefully screened the people who wanted to use spells "for fun and profit." No person of obviously negative or criminal inclinations is given power curses by me or anyone in my offices. The aforementioned instances are cases of people who were sincere and honestly curious, not malevolent. So I did not mind in the least when they requested spells with some skepticism. Once I am convinced that a person can benefit from releasing his or her latent powers, once I feel assured that that person will become a joy to others, then I give spells freely.

Negative people, wittingly or unwittingly, could wreak havoc if they possessed power spells. Practitioners of the Black Arts have already done so in the past. The Wheel-Stopping Spell, for instance, can be used negatively to unbalance the mind of another human being. In this sense the spell can "stop the wheels from turning." The Flower-and-the-Bee Spell, used against another, can cause that life to attract terrifying and nightmarish phenomena. The spell that reroutes traffic, worded differently and imbued with psychic energy, can cause a person's every wish, hope, and desire to go awry. Used negatively it can create sexual perversion in others.

Casting spells for fun and profit does not come under the heading of "jest." I am proud to report that almost all of my clients who used spells experimentally at first came to a full understanding of their potency and accepted full responsibility accordingly.

How to Activate Success Patterns Through Power Prayers

You can achieve success in any endeavor when you contact and tap the vast reservoir of psychic power lying dormant in your subconscious mind. You get in touch with this secret storehouse of boundless energy and universal knowledge every time you go to sleep. Recent experiments in dream therapy show that quite ordinary human beings can do miraculous things when they tap this hidden treasure. This is why hypnosis, a form of dream-state, makes it possible for people to transcend the limitations of physical laws. Once hypnotized, the subject, though he be a 96-pound weakling, can be told to lift 200 pounds and he will do so effortlessly. He draws on subconscious power. The incomparable work of Dr. C. G. Jung more than proves the presence and availability of potent and dynamic unconscious powers. So powerful and creative is this subconscious part of your mind that for ages it has been called God.

How Power Prayers Put You in Touch with Success Patterns

The subconscious mind is the source of success patterns. How to get in touch with that source is the issue. Dreams are one way; hypnosis is another. A third way, known to saints of every religion, is through power prayer.

Prayer is like a spaceship. By praying you surround yourself with an aura of holiness, psychic forces, spiritual atmosphere—a “spaceship”—and like a spaceship, prayer can carry you to untold heights of success and plenty. Prayer transports you to that frame of mind necessary to activate subconscious processes and powers.

He Wanted to Know the Secret to Prayers of Power

Jason C. of Chicago, Illinois used power prayers and graduated from a $2-an-hour factory worker to a $1000-a-month businessman. He had contacted the “success pattern.” Curious, he asked me to explain how the process works. I explained to Jason that success is not some nebulous “something” out there somewhere, but a set pattern emanating from the subconscious mind, a definite mold—narrow and straight—that man can “tune into” through the use of prayers. The key word is pattern.

Bound to the earth as we are, very few of us ever think in terms of traffic in the sky, and yet, there is traffic in the sky. Airline pilots and stewardesses, people who hold the lives of thousands of human beings in their hands, are well aware of sky traffic.

What keeps airplanes from crashing into one another like automobiles? Flight patterns. So long as a plane is following a pre-determined pattern, all goes well. To veer from this “avenue in the sky” is to flirt with danger and invite disaster. Analogously speaking, when we deviate from the success pattern, our lives reflect emptiness, defeat, loneliness, poverty. When we find that pattern once again, when we zero in on it, get back in formation, success and happiness follow in our wake. Prayer can put you in touch with this “miracle mile,” the success pattern.

A Power Prayer Put Them Back on Course

A few months ago I received an urgent SOS from a couple who had attended lectures given in Brooklyn, New York. I jetted there to counsel this couple who told me they were contemplating divorce after ten years of happily married life. In counseling Jim and Laura T., I discovered that the seat of their problem was not alienation, as they thought—in fact, it was plain to see that their original love of one another was intact, although buried and dwarfed by their business problems.

I said, “You two ought to stop this bickering and backbiting and get down to essentials. After listening to you these past few hours it’s plain to me that your faltering business with its consequent money problems and financial strain are the culprits. You have to get back into the flow of achievement, your success pattern.”

I gave them a prayer that is designed to thrust you into the success pattern.

The Kamikaze Power Prayer

I zero in on success. With singleminded force I propel myself into the pattern of achievement. With psychic energy as fuel, my body as vehicle, success as target, I divebomb into abundance, profits, increase, and plenty.

Anyone old enough to remember the Second World War or motion pictures about it will realize that the word “Kamikaze” was the name for the Japanese plane that flew suicide missions. The pilot of such a plane would “zero in” on a given target, aim his plane at it, and divebomb right into it, killing himself. The word “zero,” by the way, was also used to designate a Japanese plane. Kamikaze, literally translated, means “divine wind.” All of these associations come into play in the Kamikaze Power Prayer. You leave all your worries and superficial effects behind (commit suicide to them) and pray with force, zeroing in on success. This prayer carries you right to the heart of the success pattern. You can't be stopped any more than the Kamikaze pilot could be stopped. His motivation was religious and political enthusiasm; your motivation is the fervent desire to know success, fuller life, happiness. With that kind of motivation power prayers work!

The Apollo Mission Power Prayer

A similarly powerful prayer is this one, based on the image of rocketry:

With engines in full thrust I rise from this earth of petty concerns and trivial problems. I rise, rise, soar, soar, and spear through the atmosphere to the limitless sky of potential and success. I eject burned out engines of worry and doubt, failure and defeat. I travel at the speed of light through difficulties and setbacks, right on target, within the flight pattern.

How a Witch Became the High Priestess of Redondo Beach

While researching the modern uses of prayers, I met with Carole H. of Redondo Beach, a practicing witch by her own admission, but a young woman with a business head on her shoulders. She told me that she had formerly been the "ordinary, run-of-the-mill" witch, but that she caught on to the fact that in this decade, more and more people were turning to occultism.

She said, "In other words, there's money in this racket, if you know how to get it. I got tired of fooling around with philters and love potions and talismans. I decided to incorporate. I left my old coven back in Ohio and struck out for myself. Now I'm known as the 'High Priestess of Redondo Beach.' This home is worth $150,000. I've got two power boats and a Lincoln Continental, as well as a spiffy sports car. People from all over the world write to me for advice, potions, spells, and charms. They buy my books on witchcraft. I even put out T-shirts with my picture on them. I pose in the nude for those—$10 each. I have a coven of some of the wealthiest kids around. One girl is the daughter of a movie star, another the sister of a tycoon. I charge my coven members a fee of $1000 each for my guidance and services. Success is in the palm of my hand."

I inquired into the source of her success and Carole remarked that the trend toward occultism was only a small part of it. She said she prayed a certain prayer every morning and every evening in her bedroom of mirrors. Here's the prayer she uses to keep in line with the success pattern:

Samael, Asmodeus, Beelzebub, and Leviathan, lift me up upon they mighty wings to the heights of glory and success. Let no man interfere with my aims, banish all obstacles from me.

Samael, Asmodeus, Beelzebub, and Leviathan, waft me now to fame and fortune.

So mote it be!

How He Prayed Himself into a Success Pattern

Jim D. wanted success so badly that he prayed both the Kamikaze Power Prayer and the Apollo Mission Power Prayer, day and night, with determination and power. He was the owner of a small but mediocre mail order firm in Santa Barbara, California, when I met him. It was a brief visit and I didn't see Jim again for almost three years. I was very much surprised to see him enter the lecture hall in Austin, Texas. As soon as the meeting was over he and I got together and I asked how his mail order business was doing. He told me the following remarkable story:

He said, "The prayers worked like charms. Sales picked up rapidly. I even got a few letters from people saying that they really liked the quality of my merchandise. Well, those prayers got me to moving so fast that I quit the business. What I mean is, I used the prayers for a different reason. You see, when business was slow I fell in with these local yokels who liked to play poker. I never did any good at it, but it wiled away otherwise dull hours and helped me to forget my business worries. But when I found success within my grasp I decided to try winning at poker for a change. The first all-night game we had, I mentalized those prayers like crazy. I was winning right off the bat. I knew within an hour that my luck had changed for good. Confidence and self-assurance were flowing through me. I was riding high, right on target. I went into the game with $73. Eleven hours later I had over $600."

Jim went on to say that he eventually left this band of men and graduated to bigger games with wealthier people where the stakes were higher.

He said, "I got to the point where I was betting $100, $200, $300. And winning! But this is what gets me: let's say I have four hearts in my five-card hand, I pray those prayers for all I'm worth and something happens. I can't explain it. I get this feeling that I should draw one card. It's uncanny, because as any self-respecting poker player can tell you, you never draw for a flush, not one card. The odds against getting it are too great—unless you're a daredevil. Well, I'm the daredevil. When I have that success pattern feeling, I ask for one card. You should see their faces when I lay out that big, beautiful flush. And you ought to hear them howl when I rake in the cold hard cash."

Jim states that his bank account has reached the $100,000 mark in three years.

He Said, "Power Prayers Take the Gamble out of Gambling."

I do not advocate gambling, games of chance, or speculation, but I also do not interfere in the lives of others if they wish to use prayers for gaining monetarily by these methods. As long as human beings are made the way they are, I suppose there will be the impulse to "try my luck."

The man who said the above quote is Earl V. He used to live in Bingham, Idaho. He now lives in Kailua, Hawaii. He used to be single and lonely. He is now married to a glamorous cover girl. He used to work the night shift in a paper company. He now makes his money by gambling in Las Vegas once a month. The biggest complaint I ever heard him make was one time about a year ago when he wrote: "I had a bad month last April. Came away with only $13,000."

Earl claims that this power prayer is infallible:

Spinning wheels, falling cards, rolling dice, turning cylinders, how you chime with my success pattern. Spin, fall, roll and turn in cosmic rhythm with my wishes and desires.

He wrote and said he also prays another prayer nightly to calm his mind, remind him of the elusive success pattern, and keep him in tune with cosmic forces. He attributes the prayer to a writer named Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Here it is:

Luck is the tuning of our inmost thought
To chord with God's great plan. That alone, oh know
Thy silent wishes to results will grow,
And day by day shall miracles be wrought!

The Banker Who Prays Before He Invests

A banker-friend of mine visited me at the Castaways Hotel in Miami, Florida, recently and asked for some advice. He wanted to sell one block of stock for $200,000 and invest it in a new chain of supermarkets. I suggested he pray the Apollo Mission Power Prayer, wait until he felt the vibrations of the success pattern, and then decide for himself.

He called me the following day and informed me that he had gone ahead and invested the money. I know today that he must be worth millions just from the dividends deriving from that one transaction alone. He prays the power prayer before every investment now.

How Prayer Rescued Her from the Brink of Suicide

A long-distance phone call from the boyfriend of an artist I have known for over two years alerted me to the dangerous situation the young woman was in. The man informed me that my friend was in a state of acute depression.

He said, "Her paintings haven't been selling lately. She thinks she's failed as an artist. I can't seem to raise her spirits. She absolutely refused to call on you. For one thing, she's proud, as you know. For another, she thinks you are too busy. From what she's told me about you, I don't think you'd ever be too busy to help her."

I caught the earliest plane out to Phoenix, Arizona, and found Trudy looking sick, miserable, and fatigued. I concealed my chagrin because I did not wish to upset her any more than she already was. She was trembling, weak, tired. There were circles under her eyes. I was astounded, for I knew her to be vivacious, lively, attractive, and success-oriented.

After listening to her tearful troubles for half an hour I could see that she had veered away from her success pattern.

I said, "You mustn't take this so hard. Sometimes we get off course. That's what makes us human. Now, let's get you back on course."

She re-established contact with her success pattern by praying:

Defeat is a dream; success is reality.
Loss is anomaly; gain is normality.
The real and the normal are mine to claim.
I claim them now to reach my aim.

Following this "transfusion," she received $450 for one of her paintings. This sale was followed by another for $700. I was still visiting two days later when she received a call from a gallery in New York City. One of her most prized works sold to a Greek oil magnet for $4000. She is now back on course, praying ceaselessly and enjoying success. Power prayers put you on target, aim you in the right direction, and open the portals to success patterns that fill your life with joy, peace, and health.

chapter 17

Chants That Charge You with Energy and Vitality, and Make You Personable

An extraordinarily wealthy woman once said to me: "I've never been so miserable in my life. What is it all for, this tinsel and glamor and empty people? If it weren't for my martinis and my sleeping pills, I think I would go absolutely insane. This gilded cage is a prison. Don't you let anyone tell you differently."

The woman made this statement in the midst of a cocktail party in a vast ballroom peopled by celebrities and socialites. It was her party. Here was a woman who, on the surface, had all that money could buy, prestige, honors, influential friends, public popularity. And yet, she was miserable, unfulfilled, "empty." Why?

It has been my experience that truly successful people have not only money but

Personality
Inner vitality
Charisma

Energy Spark
Spirit
Character
Willpower
Zest for life
Magnetism
Self-confidence

Of the extremely successful people I know, most developed these characteristics before they became successful. They carried them forward into their new lives. You can use the above as a checklist. Check off the characteristics you now possess. You can develop the rest by chanting power chants that put you in touch with the source of these animating traits—the subconscious mind.

She Chanted Away Fatigue and Revitalized Her Life

Cervantes said, "Sleep is the best cure for waking troubles." This is the kind of sleep my socialite friend was in need of, peaceful sleep, curing sleep—not drug-induced sleep or sleep brought on by alcohol. The latter kind is not sleep at all, but stupor. As any honest pill-taker will tell you, it's pure torture, because they awaken heavy-headed, hungover, weary, fatigued, as though they had been laboring to sleep all night.

My friend started chanting at my behest. I gave her a soothing quote from Ovid's Metamorphoses, for a good night's rest can create a great transformation in a person.

The Insomnia Chant

Ovid wrote:

Sleep, rest of nature, O sleep, most gentle of the divinities, peace of the soul, thou at whose presence care disappears, who soothest hearts wearied with daily employments, and make them strong again for labour!

The woman chanted this soporific chant daily, in her penthouse, at social gatherings, on television, even amidst fluorescent-lighted offices of glass and steel.

She wrote to me and said, "You should patent this chant and call it 'The Ten-Day Cure for Insomnia.' In just ten days I started to notice differences in my body and mind. I started sleeping without the use of barbiturates. It feels like a warm blanket of sleep falls over me every night. I'm sleeping like a baby."

She now has dispensed with sleeping pills altogether. Her drinking has ceased. She says that now she can see with a clear mind that she had been drinking, not because she liked it or needed it, but simply to please others, to make impressions. This self-deception has gone from her life. She wrote recently and remarked that her beautician said: "You are becoming more beautiful every day—and it has nothing to do with my treatments. You seem to be glowing!" A woman can receive no better compliment from anyone.

He Was a Legal Drug Addict

I am reminded of Frank P. of Toledo, Ohio, who also used the "Insomnia Chant" to release himself from bondage to drugs. Frank was known as a "dynamo," but both he and I knew that he was no dynamo, but a taut system of frayed nerves. Frank was taking two and three sleeping pills nightly. During the day he was swallowing all sorts of assorted capsules to give him energy, wakefulness, alertness. Daily green and red pills were being taken to combat the effects of the nightly yellow and blue pills! In the process, Frank was killing himself. After four weeks of chanting the "Insomnia Chant" every day and every night, he started to slack off on the pills. Seven weeks later he was taking only one sleeping pill per night. Nine weeks later he was absorbing no barbiturates, no depressants, no "uppers." Frank is free, energetic, forceful, clear-eyed—and truly a dynamo!

How Chanting Makes Unlimited Power Available to You

Sleep is a powerhouse. You go to it to recharge your psychic batteries. People who do not sleep well, do not live well. It is during sleep that the subconscious mind is free to help you most, when the busy, cluttered conscious mind is at rest. Sleep opens locks to canals of vital energy. Sleep raises shades that block the rays of the sun of vigor. Disturbed sleep is minimal sleep.

There are at least thousands of causes of minimal sleep, inadequate sleep. These range from hyperactive thinking to disagreeable sleeping partners, from negative emotions to indigestion, from plaguing worries and concerns to psychic discomfort. If you are aware of any reasons you have bad nights, you can chant as others have to prolong and deepen therapeutic sleep. You, too, can awaken every morning feeling vigorous, attractive, personable, and ready for the world, no matter what the day may bring.

In addition to the "Insomnia Chant," there are also these chants for you:

The Sunny Beach Chant

Soft and sultry rays of sun
Spilling warmly over me
Clear, inviting waves of peace
Rolling in from the sea.
Sand beneath me, sun above
Sand of rest, sun of love
Water washing, rippling free
Water healing only me.

The Lovely Lake Chant

O lovely lake, lapping lightly
Lift me gently to sleep
O languid lake, lolling, laughing
Take me to the restful deep.

The Light-as-a-Feather Chant

Weightlessness, ease, lightness, peace.
Wafting me upon a breeze,
Ether, air, transparency
I drift to sleep with ease.

Why Vim and Vigor Are Psychic Gifts

Vitality and strength, force, character and personality—these do not come with pill-taking, weight-lifting, vocabulary-building, or posture-improvement. There are hundreds of expensive courses on the market reputed to make you personable, likable, more attractive, but they all miss an important fact: vim and vigor are inner psychic and spiritual gifts. Courses such as these can make you a success, but they cannot make you successful. If you want to be a success at a party you can learn how to talk brilliantly. If you want to be a success at card-playing you can learn the secrets of dealing, drawing, and betting. If you want to be a success in school, you can learn how to read faster, study harder, and remember facts and figures. But if you want to be successful, if you want your very life to reflect happiness, achievement, and fulfillment continuously, then you have to begin by going inside, that is, you must tap the source of vitality, energy, and personality.

How Chanting Brings Forth Potent But Latent Powers

Some months ago I met with a well-to-do interior decorator, a man of 52. I visited him at his suite of offices in downtown Los Angeles. The office walls were covered with expensively framed pictures, every one of them portraying this man in some form of action—golfing with a well-known senator, swimming with movie stars, playing tennis, dancing at a masked ball, attending the Academy Awards presentation. But here was the point difficult to miss: in every photo the man was in his twenties, thirties, and early forties. In every picture he looked energetic, well-formed, personable.

The reason I was visiting Sidney R. is this: He had been dealt a crushing blow to his ego.

He said, "You may think it's a petty thing compared to the human problems you deal with every day, but believe me, this thing has got me down. I met a topless dancer last week in San Francisco and I really got turned on. She turned me off! I was stunned. You know what I mean. I have clutching women scratching at my doors all the time. But this one—her name's Judi—wouldn't even give me the time of day. When I induced the manager to send her to my table, she came reluctantly. In fact, she chewed me out for greasing her boss's palm and called me an extorting, egotistic chauvinist. I told her that I just wanted to be friendly and that I wasn't the typical dirty-old-man. She said something like, 'I'm not calling you a dirty-old-man. I'm saying you have no sense of values. Just because I'm a topless dancer doesn't mean I can be bought and sold. Paying my boss to make me sit here with you makes you look like a frail old man incapable of attracting a woman in any other way.' I'm telling you, I've never felt so low in all my life. The worst of it is I can't get Judi out of my mind. You've helped me before. Can you help me with this?"

I said, "No, but you can help yourself—if you've got the moxie. The woman deflated your ego a little. You may have to deflate it a lot. Look around you. You're living in the past. Look at you in these photographs—young, vigorous, energetic. They show a man when he was in tune with the source of his magnetism. Look at you now. You're self-complacent, self-centered, you've got a paunch in that $200 suit, you look pale."

He said, "What can I do about it? I'm not getting any younger, you know. Hell, I spend thousands on barbers, manicurists, tailors, masseurs, and gym instructors. If you know another method for rejuvenation, I'll pay you $10,000 for the secret."

I said, "I'll give you the secret for free. First of all, you've got to get more sleep, meaningful, deep sleep."

I explained to him how chanting puts you in touch with healthful sleep, energy-renewing sleep. He chanted for four weeks and improved his sleeping habits, even though business pressures did not decrease. When it was obvious to me that he had chanted faithfully and with force, I gave him this chant for tapping the source of vital energy, power, and strength:

The Muscle-Building, Charisma-Producing Chant

A well-formed body and a sparkling personality go hand in hand. The one augments the other to make you attractive, handsome, personable. This chant, intoned repeatedly and with emotion, transmits the message to the subconscious, which then responds with the appropriate alterations:

Miracle-working powers within Hear my plea
Produce in this body
Muscles to see.
Wonder-working powers within Hear my call,
Charisma I want
Looks and all.

My friend chanted this power chant for ten weeks, after which he wrote and told me it was working, that he could feel his muscles toning up and his self-assurance emanating from his eyes. Between the repeated use of this chant and the physical treatments he was accustomed to, he developed a body build and personality renewal which made him as personable and magnetic as he had been in those early pictures, with this added benefit: the wisdom of his years.

He sent me a telegram which stated that he and the topless dancer were off to Europe to be married.

How Physical Beauty Is Enhanced by Chanting

Beauty is not merely a pretty or a handsome face. Truly successful people know that sparkle, vivacity, so-called "oomph" must emanate from every pore of the healthy skin, radiate from every glance of sparkling eyes, sing to the ear with every word spoken.

How often have you heard the expression, "She is dripping with sex appeal"? Sex symbols, movie actresses, models, beauty queens—these women know that sexiness is not created by the body alone—all women have bodies!—but by total, complete immersion in qualities which come from deep inside. Women who are expert at tapping this inner source know how to use every glance of their eyes, every gesture of their hands, every movement of their feet and legs, every turn of their figures, every word, laugh, sigh, and breath. By tapping this inner reservoir of psychic and spiritual force they animate their eyes, their eyebrows, their lips and tongues and teeth, their limbs and torsos. Career models really work at this because sexiness is their business. They know that beauty is indeed only skin deep, that true beauty requires inner help, powerful complementation.

She Was a Spinster Because She Thought She Was Ugly

Some months ago, I listened to the story of a woman in Peekskill, New York, who constantly compared herself with the big-busted beauties of stage and screen. It was painful for me to see this perfectly normal woman downgrade herself. She is 32, never married, terribly shy, suffering from inferiority feelings, and never goes out on dates for fear of rejection.

She said, "I'm only five-feet-two inches tall, and my figure is 30-21-30."

I said, "You have just described a very lovely woman to me. Not all men desire voluptuous, big-breasted females, no matter what the trend may be. If you continue to consider such women as the norm, you will always be abnormal. You are normal in your own right, and there are men who would be highly attracted to you. You are a bit pale, your eyes could use more luster, you could emanate more sex appeal, but these things can be developed from within through the use of chants."

I told her the story of Cleopatra, a mere wisp of a girl, who conquered half the world and was surrounded by admiring, stalwart males who desired her attention. I reminded her of the fantastic popularity of beautiful Twiggy, the sparkling personality of Goldie Hawn, and the unlimited vivacity of Sandy Duncan.

I said, "Beauty does not reside in physical proportions but in the emanations of the heart. You can be popular, loved, pursued, and admired."

When you realize that female beauty and male good looks come from within and not from calisthenics, body-building courses, cosmetics or perfumes, then you are on your way to increased vim and vigor, popularity and personality.

... The beautiful attracts the beautiful.

Leigh Hunt

... Beauty is power; a smile its sword.

Charles Reade

... What is truly beautiful needs no adorning.

Sataka

... The beauty that addresses itself to the eyes is only the spell of the moment; the eye of the body is not always that of the soul.

How Power Chants Can Increase Your Popularity

Chants charge you with energy, vitality, and vigor by tapping your subconscious storehouse of transforming powers. Once you have tapped this TNT, looks, personality, appeal, and popularity can trail on its heels.

chapter 18

How to Curse Obstacles to Marriage, Love, and Fulfilling Sexual Relationships

Recently, a young man in great distress came to my office; his girlfriend's father had forbidden the girl to associate with him.

He said, "Her father is a Fundamentalist preacher and he won't allow his daughter to go out with anyone who is not of his faith. He calls me a hippie. What in heck is a hippie? Am I a hippie because I pray the way I want to? Or because I wear a beard? I just have a different set of values from his. I don't interfere with his values; why does he interfere with mine?"

I asked this perplexed and heartbroken young man if he loved the girl in question. He said he did. I then asked if the girl loved him in return. He replied in the affirmative. That was all I needed to know.

I said, "Your tolerance of the man's intolerance is praiseworthy. You're right not to hate the man. Since you and the girl love one another, nothing should stand in the way of your happiness, particularly since you two are old enough to make your own decisions. I will give you a power curse which should attack the invisible forces at work in the psychic atmosphere."

He Cursed the Bonds of Stifling Tradition and Love Blossomed

This anxious young man used his inner treasure of fervent emotion and psychic energy to curse a two-thousand-year-old tradition which today tends to stifle the young. He practiced the curse for seven weeks, attacking the problem on the non-physical plane where most damage is done these days. People who fall victim to one-sidedness, bias, restrictive attitudes, and Puritanical ideas are usually innocent of intentional wrong-doing and basically they mean well when they try to force their opinions, religious views, and social standards on others. When oppressive behavior like this interferes in your life, it is time to do something constructive about it. This young man employed this curse:

The Chain-Breaking Curse

Chains of antiquity, bonds of age,
I command you to loose.
Set free this man, set free this mind
Release his heart, and release me.
Cursed be the darkness which beclouds the mind of man.
Begone! Cursed darkness!

After seven emotion-charged weeks of uttering this power curse, this young man's girlfriend called him on the telephone and invited him to her home. She said her father wished to speak with him. That very evening, the preacher asked the young man to forgive him!

The preacher said, "I found a passage in the Book, in Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and the Lord has convicted me of sinful pride and unbrotherly action. I know now that you and I are no different from one another."

What could create such a fantastic change in a man's life? The preacher attributes it to this Bible passage:

There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. (Galatians 3:28).

The young man and his happy girlfriend attribute the miracle to the power curse that breaks chains of prejudice and bias. They still use it faithfully—together, in love, with hope.

How Curses Can Bring You Your Heart's Desire

Eugene F. of Poinsett, Arkansas, was totally and madly in love with Joyce C. There was only one problem: Eugene had never spoken to Joyce, except to say "good morning," or "good evening." He was too aware of disparities between them. Eugene was a janitor in a big office building; Joyce was a receptionist there. Eugene was short and balding; Joyce was tall and redheaded. Eugene felt that he was lowly and unattractive; he felt that Joyce was beautiful, ravishing, a goddess.

I counseled Eugene for three weeks on Tuesday and Friday evenings, along with three other men suffering from similar love problems. I pointed out to Eugene that when love strikes it sees no differences. Love is the world's equalizer. But love can operate only when the man-made barriers are torn down. That's where power curses come in, curses that can do to obstacles what demolition squads do to city walls. When you infuse curses with impassioned willpower you become a veritable combat Marine on the psychic level. Pinpoint your objective, note the obstacles, and go forth conquering. The following curses will make you combat-ready:

The Hand Grenade Curse

I pull the pin of desire and need, love and respect, I toss this grenade of power and force into the midst of the obstacles which stand between me and my heart's desire. Explode, explode, demolish the blockade, destroy the terror, eradicate my loneliness.

The Bayonet Curse

With the strength of love empowering these arms, with fervent desire for love filling my heart, I thrust now this bayonet of piercing passion into the very heart of obtrusion and restriction.

The Tiger Tank Curse

Advance, tank of love, and crush beneath thy powerful treads the hindrance and delay that separate me from the one I desire.

He Cursed Prohibiting Thoughts and Enjoyed Life

Eugene, I might say, won a Gold Star for action above and beyond the call of duty. He used the "Hand-Grenade" curse nightly while lying in bed in the dark, envisioning combat scenes which were peopled not by warring soldiers, but by negative traits, prohibiting thoughts, and self-castigation. After three weeks of constant and fervent cursing, he approached Joyce and boldly asked her for a date. Not only did the woman accept the offer, she enjoyed the evening tremendously and told Eugene so. Moreover, she dated him again and again. I haven't heard wedding bells yet, but Eugene wrote to me and said, "When I walk down the street with this luscious redhead, I feel like a king!"

Curses Against Love-Barriers Can Be Used by Anyone

Anyone can use curses to explode obstacles to love if they have the wherewithal to persevere. I know men who have achieved their heart's desires even though they were initially plagued by doubt, worry, fear, uncertainty, indecision, timidity, shyness. I know women who have used curses to combat loneliness, self-deception, social barriers, neighborhood intrigues, fear, worry, lack of confidence, low self-concept, and even other women.

If you have courage and remain resolute nothing can stop you from realizing your dreams, whether erotic, romantic, marital, or ideal. The following curses are for men and women who have particular obstacles in their way:

A Curse for the Inhibited

Love is a holy thing, the bond between two human beings. What shall man do to stop it? I am needy of love, affection, and sexual embrace. I curse that which prevents me from responding to the call of love. May the bonds of inhibition be severed by the arrows of fair Cupid.

A Curse for the Daring

Love, love, propel me into the arms of she (or he) whom I desire. Cursed be all that comes between our vibrating, pulsing bodies. Impel me, thrust me, drive me into the hungry arms of my lover.

The Don Juan Curse

With passionate kisses I curse obstruction. With embracing arms I crush opposition. With naked legs I kick impediment. I curse the resistance of the blonde, the hesitation of the brunette, the reluctance of the redhead. With this curse I make all women my domain.

The Lolita Curse

O Aphrodite, so fair, giver of love, wisdom and knowledge, I know all men are boys at heart. Make me, therefore, young and beautiful in their sight. Cursed be the obstacles of age, of tradition, of opinion, of bias. Cursed be all that makes men timorous. A young girl am I, lovely, seductive, and desirable. Cursed be that which keeps men from me.

Their Marriage Gave Them Everything But Sexual Joy

Mr. and Mrs. T., Clinton and Jane, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, came to me for marriage counseling. They are both in their forties and live alone now that their son and daughter are in college. Clinton and Jane expressed their desire for more sexual satisfaction in their marriage.

Jane said, "Clint and I have talked about this among ourselves many times. It seems that we are going through some kind of change. At least I know I am. I've been reading up on some of the latest news in regard to sexual activity, principally the work of Masters and Johnson and Dr. Mary Jane Sherfey, and quite frankly, I feel I am not getting all the happiness married people should have."

Clinton said, "I don't want to think it's my fault. I try. But there are these feelings. I mean, now that the children are away, Jane and I have so much more time together, but somehow I can't seem to shake the feelings I had when the kids were around. Jane wants me to go to bed naked, for example. Well, why not? She's my wife. I want to please her. But I can't seem to bring myself to let go like that. This thing is interfering with our happiness. How can we get more out of married life? How can we let loose?"

I said, "Try to remember that these inhibitions you speak of are superimposed on otherwise natural tendencies. When you and Jane were first married you had no difficulty in pleasing her. Years of caring for your growing children has established new patterns of behavior in you. But these patterns are not as solid as you think. Your subconscious mind knows no limitations; only your conscious mind can be trained and limited. So let's get back to sources and beginnings."

I gave Clinton and Jane this curse against the "hardened arteries of life."

The Curse That Renews Sexual Bliss

Amor and Psyche, Cupid and Venus, restore to me passion and vitality.

Mars and Jupiter, Ares and Zeus, instill in me strength and force.

Lusty waters and penetrating winds

Renew my vigor, my capacity, my joy.

Cursed be weakness, cursed be shyness

Cursed be impotence, cursed be frigidity

Cursed be all that parts me and thee.

How They Rejuvenated Their Sex Life in One Night

I received an animated phone call from Clinton the very next day, about noontime. Highly excited and sounding like a little boy who had just won a bicycle, he apologized for calling at the lunch hour and explained that he had just gotten out of bed.

He enthused, "I don't know where to begin! Jane and I have been awake all night! We haven't done that since our honeymoon! We came home and when we got into bed we practiced the curse together. I figured we'd do it this way for a few weeks or even months, but in less than half an hour, things began to happen! I know I must sound like a youth flushed with first love, but I can't help it. I don't think we got to sleep until after four this morning!"

I listened patiently as the delighted man went on about his sexual exploits of the night before. I was particularly glad to hear that his wife was experiencing the same degree of joy and happiness. I'm sure Clinton would have gone on and on had it not been for the interruption.

He said, "I'm sorry, but I've got to go now. Jane is calling me—from the bedroom!"

Curses Can Be Keys to Happiness and Fulfillment

Clinton was amazed that the curse had worked so quickly. I was not surprised, for the couple had come to me in a state of agitated excitement in the first place. In other words, they were both possessed of strong and impassioned desires, activating their psychic powers lying latent in their subconscious minds. And as I have stressed time and again, it is this energetic impetus which makes curses work.

By the same means you, too, can let curses work wonders in your love life.

chapter 19

Spells That Can Create A Happier, Healthier, More Powerful You

Norma and Paul S. came to see me in Chicago recently, overwrought and worried. Their ten-year-old daughter, they said, was victim to a depressive tendency. They feared for their daughter's life.

Norma said, "She's afraid all the time, day and night. Everything seems to frighten her—playmates, teachers, strangers, even our minister. She's afraid of things and her own thoughts."

Paul added, "She told me that at night her blankets talk to her. I've tried to talk to her, to make her see that there is nothing to be afraid of, but I can't seem to get through to her. Norma can get her to come out of her room once in a while, but then she sits like a stone in a chair and won't move. We've about given up hope of making her see the unreasonableness of her actions."

I said, "You are attacking this problem on the wrong plane. Trying to get your sick daughter to listen to reason will not work. The reasoning mind is the conscious mind and when it is sick it does not respond to reason. You have to get to the psychic level of the mind, the subconscious."

I explained to Norma and Paul that to reason, "There's nothing to be afraid of" to a depressed person is like feeding a hot fudge sundae to a child suffering an upset stomach. Logic only adds to the suffering of a sick mind. In this little girl's case her fears are all too real. I advised Norma and Paul to treat them as real, not to dismiss them as "nothing but" the whims of the childish mind.

Jesus did not sit down with the demon-possessed and reason, "Now you have to pull yourselves together and stop acting this way." He cast the devils out himself, requiring no cooperation from the ill. He didn't even ask for their faith!

They Cast a Spell on Demons of Illness and Healed Their Daughter

Norma and Paul resolved to cease appealing to the reason of their sick daughter's mind. They employed a curse against the invisible psychic forces which often hover about the sick mind. They cast this spell:

The Psychic Spell

O healing powers of unseen waters, come forward this hour to soothe this loved one.
 O destroying powers of unknown depths, return you now to thy birthplace.
 Cause of fear, womb of dread, I bind you from attacking this soul.

Norma and Paul practiced this spell in the presence of their ailing daughter mentally, in silent faith and hope, charging the spell with their combined psychic energy and visualizing the healing blanket of supernatural force covering the girl. They did this daily and nightly for three weeks. During the day when Paul was at work, Norma would mentally intone the spell. At night they would steal quietly into their daughter's bedroom. Hand in hand they would stand over the sleeping girl and spellbind the unconscious forces plaguing their loved one.

After three weeks of casting the spell the equally subconscious powers of healing began to take over. Gradually, day by day, the little girl feared less and less. Norma and Paul cast the spell with fervor after they were able to take their daughter's fears seriously and realistically. When they intoned this spell they believed they were attacking demons of illness and potent psychic entities. Believing that, potent healing forces from their own subconscious minds were able to activate and attack the dark forces. The spiritual counterpart of this psychic and psychological warfare is best explained by the Apostle Paul, who said: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." (Ephesians 6: 12). These "high places" are the uncharted regions of the human mind, what Dr. C. G. Jung has termed the "collective unconscious."

How Spells Penetrate Barriers to Health and Happiness

You can contact and tap the mighty storehouse of higher-than-conscious power and health through the employment of power spells. Spells can help you bypass conscious limitations, rational restrictions, and the confines of reason. When you intone spells mentally or orally with effulgent emotion you transcend the physical, the earthly, the conscious, and link into the metaphysical, the spiritual, the superconscious. In these "high places" sickness is error, unhappiness is sin, impotence is evil. Spells put you in touch with health, happiness and power.

How this spiritual and psychic process solved the problem for Norma and Paul is best expressed by them in a recent letter I received from them.

Dear Mr. Laurence,

We have to be the happiest family in Chicago! We took our happy and carefree daughter on a picnic yesterday. To see her laughing and playing, running through the fields and enjoying herself lifted our hearts more than we can say. Paul and I discussed a million ways to tell you about our joy, but each way would call for millions of words. We decided to tell you this: our daughter's eyes are sparkling, she laughs, she jokes, she runs and hops and jumps. And Paul and I are joyous, relieved, extremely happy.

Can spells dispel negativity? The letter speaks for itself.

He Said, "I Was Run-down, Nervous, and Shy."

It was during the writing of this very chapter that I received this air mail letter:

Fairbanks, Alaska

Dear Mr. Laurence,

I know you travel quite a bit so I hope this letter reaches you somewhere. It is important for me to tell you that you have helped me tremendously.

I attended one of your lectures which you gave in Bangor, Maine, about two months ago. I attended only because I had nothing to do that evening, but that night changed my whole life.

You see, I've always been a small man, underweight and nervous. When I dropped in to listen to you I was run-down, nervous, and shy. When you spoke of man's ability to tap unknown sources of psychic power, my ears pricked up. I wrote down one of the spells you mentioned, the "Transfusion Spell." I just tucked it into my wallet and forgot about it for almost two weeks—until the day I got so sickly that I thought I was going to die. Then I remembered the piece of paper, got it out, and like a man struggling to reach a life preserver in the ocean, I started using it with all my might. In a matter of weeks I was feeling new strength rushing through me. My hands stopped shaking. My doctor was amazed at the difference after taking my blood pressure and heart-rate. His amazement made me feel even better.

As for shyness—I don't even know what that is any more!

The Transfusion Spell

Here is the spell this Fairbanks man refers to:

Power infuse me.
Strength infill me.
Energy, force, potency, and might Animate this body both day and night.
Renew me, enliven me, rejuvenate me
Give vigor to me for all to see.

Spells of Power and How to Use Them

You can look upon the power of spells as mental and psychic forces stemming from an infinite intelligence which resides in the deep recesses of your subconscious mind, superior intelligence that can be utilized in your own life when it is tapped and channeled by power spells.

This means that energy and power—subconscious forces—manifest physically in your life, mind, and body through the use of spells. To cast a spell is to turn your unused energies to positive and constructive use; in other words, spells activate eternal and infinite powers that are normally latent in human beings but that can be brought forward into the daily earthly life. Cast spells with feeling and desire for health, power, and personal happiness, and you call into play untold therapeutic and life-enriching forces.

Spells of Power for Everyday Use

Do you want more happiness in your life? Would you like more health? Is power what you need? Whatever you desire, if you desire it with fervor, can be yours now through the power of spells. I am thoroughly convinced of this by one salient fact: I have never heard nor read about a sickly witch! Or a powerless magician! Or an unhappy saint! Or a weak warlock! Or a shy sorcerer!

If spells have been used to bring the riches of life, the vim and vigor of health, and the feeling of power into the lives of mystics, occultists, and divines, I see no reason why they cannot do so for you and for me.

Every moment of your life should be filled with energy, vivacity, happiness. The following spells are for everyday use, designed to combat the everyday setbacks and limitations we often meet today:

The Hand of Jesus Spell

Waters of evil, sea of depression,
Ocean of limitation, stream of obstacles,
I walk upon you unscathed, out of danger.
Torrential antagonism, swirling sickness,
Tumultuous weakness, swallowing fears,
I walk without doubt and pass by unharmed.

This power spell is based upon the story of Jesus offering his hand to Peter when Peter doubted that he could walk on the water with his Master. Reading this text will give you some idea of the forceful energy you need to infuse the spell:

When Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus.

But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me.

And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him; and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

Matthew 14:29-31

My files show that many men and women have gained strength and self-confidence by using the "Hand of Jesus" spell. Psychically, you can grasp the same strong hand by casting the same spell. Let the words of the spell represent whatever comes against you in your daily life.

The David Spell

Several religious clients have used this spell which gave them a new insight into the psychological and psychic meaning of the Scriptures.

Anthony O. of Albany, New York was having trouble at the factory where he worked.

Warren F. of Montgomery, Kansas was suffering nervousness and fear because certain people were creating difficulties in his life.

Jean S. of Scranton, Pennsylvania came under psychic attack by neighborhood gossips.

Helen A. of Council Bluffs, Iowa was lonely, unhappy, and unloved.

Each of these men and women cast this spell once they understood that the vast regions of the powerful subconscious mind is God, Lord:

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?

When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell.

Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple.

For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up upon a rock.

And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me: therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord.

Hear, O Lord, when I cry with my voice: have mercy also upon me, and answer me.

Psalm 27:1-7

Power Spells for Evoking Happiness, Health, Power

I bind the joylessness and loneliness that dares befall me. I sing unto the joy and happiness which are mine by right and they answer my fervent call.

Disease, uncase, may you choke in the vines of my growing strength and power. Illness, weakness, may you sink beneath the waves of my burgeoning health, vitality, and energy.

With every wish of my heart, with every thought of my mind, with every surge of my spirit, I send this spell to bind all that would keep me from power, force, energy, and authority.

Keep Your Sight on Your Latent Power and Go Forward Conquering

The physical, the earthly, the conscious, the rational—these are all too apparent in our lives. To deal with everyday problems by physical means is to fight fire with fire and thus contribute to universal unhappiness. Set your sights on the powers of your subconscious mind. Muster your forces, your psychic energy, your precious emotional charges and use them constructively by casting spells which can change your life for the better. Proceed with utter, total, unswerving confidence.

chapter 20

Chants That Can Make You a Money-Magnet

A few months ago a group of 23 business executives invited me to Miami, Florida to give a lecture series titled "Money-Magnetism and You." I began this series by speaking about magnetism itself.

How Chants Make Money-Magnets of People

I explained to this group that while there are natural magnets in the earth, as well as magnetism surrounding the earth, one can make any piece of iron, steel, or loadstone magnetic. This may be done by passing an electric current through a coil of wire wrapped around the metal. The same principle applies on the psychic level when you want to become a money-magnet. By allowing psychic energy from your subconscious (electric current) to pass through your entire system of being (the coil) you become infused with that energy. The secret lies in the word "allowing." You can do anything you wish to a piece of metal—turn it, flip it, wish on it, feel it, rub it—but until you pass that vital electric current through it, it will not be a magnet. Similarly, until you are charged with vital psychic energy, you will not be a money-magnet.

Chants properly worded, properly charged with emotion and feeling, properly used, can magnetize you, make you a constant magnet pole on which the flow of money concentrates. Millionaires are such poles, drawing money to themselves constantly, earning more money with every dollar they spend. Money-magnets do not pour money into avenues of one-way travel; they place it into spiraling circles so that whatever they invest grows, multiplies, and returns to them ten times over.

How to Magnetize Yourself Through Chanting

To be magnetized means to know this secret: you control your own destiny. Show me the man who does not understand this and I will show you the man who cannot become a money-magnet. Such a man is like the piece of metal which is not charged with electrical current.

Through the use of power chants you come to realize that you can change anything and everything in your life when you change your thoughts. You can begin to brighten your tomorrow by chanting today. To become a success you have to think success. A chant like this one helps you to think right:

The Success Chant

Of my mind, the psychic faction
Knows that thought precedes action
First I think, then I do it
I win because I can intuit.
What I am is what I think
The cup I hold is what I drink
I change therefore what I think
Success becomes my favorite drink.

He Chanted to Succeed in Business and Won a Contest

Curtis V., one of the above-mentioned Miami businessmen, started chanting to make himself a money-magnet. His conscious aim was to benefit enormously from certain business ventures he had entered. But in a way which he felt was unrelated to the chanting, he won a contest he had entered months before. The subconscious mind knows what's best for you!

Curtis won:

Two glorious weeks of sailing, sunning and swimming in the Caribbean.

The option to invite two other people along.

A trip to the Virgin Islands.

Free jet flights for him and his party.

And $2,500 to do with as he wished.

Curtis wrote to me from St. Thomas and said he was looking forward to the continuation of chanting after he had enjoyed this unforeseen vacation.

Success Chants for Those Who Have Raised Their Sights

Once you permit chants to lift you up out of the stream of ordinary people your subconscious mind will begin to help you better yourself materially, socially and physically. Chanting raises the sights, and raised sights set goals, reach for the stars, overcome barriers to money, wealth, and material possessions. Consider yourself worth 50 percent more than you usually do. If you make $100 per week, then think of yourself as worth $150 per week. If you are a businessman worth $20,000 per year, consider yourself worth at least $30,000.

Raising your sights activates psychic energy, vital energy required if you are going to chant with power and determination and perseverance.

The following success chants need to be infused with psychic force:

The Magnetic Needle Chant

Needle, Needle, of my brain
Point the way that I may gain,
Needle, Needle, of my mind
Show me where the wealth to find.

The Loadstone Chant

Like a rock I stand, safe and sure
With mind open and sunny
Like a stone I sit, innate power
Drawing to me money, money.

He Chanted for Ten Days and Gained $50,000

When I gave this same series of lectures on "Money-Magnetism and You" in Denver, Colorado a few years ago, Herman T. chanted magnetism chants to improve his luck with the stock market. He told me he had been losing steadily for months, or just breaking even, and said he wanted a sure-fire way of beating this strange but fascinating financial system.

Herman chanted for days without any substantial changes in his luck, but when he started chanting the "Success Chant" in earnest, he found himself thinking in different terms than earlier. He began considering less favored stock. Taking a chance he purchased a block of stock that netted him $50,000.

He said, "It was a crazy thing to do. My business associates ridiculed my move. One bank president called me a gambler, no better than a racetrack bum. I let none of this opinion bother me.

Chanting had cleared my mind. I received intuitive insight into this particular stock and I followed the hunch. It paid off."

How Her Hobby Makes Her a Money-Magnet

Marlene L.'s neighbors decried the building of a freeway so close to their homes. Marlene was already chanting success chants when this freeway was opened. One day as she stood on her sunporch watching the hundreds of cars entering and leaving the ramps, she got an intuitive hunch. She describes it as "a voice."

She said, "I was standing there, chanting to myself, because Mrs. F. had just departed after buying one of my pottery pieces. Suddenly this voice said, 'Those cars contain customers.' That was all. I thought about that. Customers for what? What could this mean? Then I remembered something Mrs. F. had said, something I had heard from others but had always accepted the statement as a kind compliment, not advice. She said, 'You should open a little stand and sell these pieces. You do fine work.' It all came together in one great flash of insight. That evening I asked my husband if I could convert our sunporch into a small gift shop. He was enthused with the idea and even helped the carpenters fix it up. In less than a month I was in business for myself, meeting all sorts of new people, and raking in money."

Marlene tells me that she sells her pottery for $5, $10, $30 and $50. A recent letter from this chanting housewife-turned-business woman said, "A woman from Texas commissioned me to do a huge tree swing seat of porcelain. Why someone would want such a thing I have no idea, but who cares? She paid me $350 to start. I get another $350 when the piece is finished!"

There Is Only One Power and Chants Establish Contact with It

Chanting money-magnets know the one truth you need to know; there is only one power. This power is not a conscious object or function, but a subconscious process. Thus it is with you all the time, latent, concealed, residing in your psyche. When you use chants harmoniously and constructively—in tune with your subconscious—you get in touch with this infinite storehouse of treasure. Money is a concrete object, material, of the conscious, outside. Wealth is an abstract term, immaterial, of the subconscious, inside. In this sense, everything you can see with your physical eyes is a reflection of some higher force. When you see a tree it can represent the growth of the individual—maturation. When you see a babbling brook it can represent the stream of life itself. This is why Jesus spoke in parables so often, analogizing his great teachings to natural objects and processes, trying to get man to understand that the kingdom of God is within. Chants pave the golden road to the treasure.

How to Know When Chants are Working for You

Remember that Curtis V. of Miami thought that his contest-winning was unrelated to his chanting for money-magnetism. This is foolish. Look everywhere for power chanting's repercussions. Think wealth and wealth can come in any fashion. You will know chants are working when you see concrete results appearing in your life, perhaps in areas you least expect.

Mine worker Barry F. chanted because he wanted business opportunities. His uncle retired and left him his own business worth $250,000.

Piano tuner Jed S. chanted for six months to improve his financial condition. He was hoping to get into the textile business. But he didn't. He now travels around the country, foot-loose and fancy free, tuning the pianos of rock and country bands at $25 an hour! That's a mighty sweet tune!

Fireman Ed D. chanted when he invested his life savings in a small business of his own—filling fire extinguishers. Endorsed by the mayor of his city, Ed is taking in over $200 a week, just filling and periodically checking fire extinguishers! He spends his ample spare time sunning at the beach.

Money-Magnetism Is for You, Too

Thought is a powerful tool of man. So is feeling. And so is chanting, for it involves both thought and feeling. Think success, feel hopeful, and chant with power, and you can become a money-magnet. An age-old saying applies here: What you put into it is what you get out of it.

The recitation of words is not enough, as I have pointed out in this book, and as I have stressed to hundreds of successful people. Chanting can lead you to untapped sources of tremendous psychic power, which in turn can charge you with the current necessary to make you a money-magnet. Once that is accomplished, money, material possessions, business opportunities, helpful allies and friends, unexpected windfalls—all of these and more can gravitate to you.

Remember this: Your subconscious mind is a powerhouse, a storehouse, and a treasury. You can draw from it any time. Chant with fervor, design, expectation, and faith.

A Parting Word . . .

This book of Spells, Prayers, Curses and Chants places at your disposal the very energy which is already yours by birthright, energy locked away in the subconscious mind.

Take a firm hold on the contents of this book; read it with hope; use it with faith . . .
